CARNIVAL WEEK

JULY 31st TO AUGUST 5th

DISPLAY AND SALE

THIS will indeed be a gala week. In keeping with the decorative spirit we have provided a display of new autumn merchandise. We will show this week the advance styles as authorized in the great fashion center, New York. Ladies' suits, coats, millinery and, in fact, everything in ready-to-wear will be displayed, giving you an insight in all that will be stylish the coming season. In addition to this display we have provided a special sale in which every department in the store will be represented. You will find the sale goods displayed on counters and tables at prices only possible for a "Carnival Week."

We invite you to make this store your headquarters, meet your friends here; visitors will be glad we came.

and will get together at Manitou and listen to speeches by prominent men from their own state and from Colorado. In the afternoon they expect either Governor Shafroth or former Governor Charles S. Thomas of Denver to talk, and possibly both. It is thought that at least 1,500 will join in the affair, which is the annual picnic of the Missouri association, called Missouri day. Everybody is invited, and "Show Me" badges can be obtained by calling at Judge Clyde L. Sturrett's office in the Independence building. Those who attend are promised the time of their lives.

Yesterday afternoon the executive committee of the association, composed of Van E. Rouse, chairman; A. E. Woodruff, Clyde L. Sturrett, O. P. Jackson, Mrs. J. F. Neff and James Van Dorn, appointed the following: Committee on arrangements, James Van Dorn, O. P. Jackson, Mrs. J. F. Neff, all of this region; Miss Mary G. Boyer and D. F. Scratchfield, both of Marshall, Mo. Committee on program, A. E. Woodruff, Clyde L. Sturrett, both of this city; Mrs. Edward Marr and E. M. Birkes, both of St. Joseph, Mo., and John A. Edwards of Marshall, Mo. Cascade, put in a bid for the picnic, but the committee decided that Manitou would be the better place this year because there are now about 500 Missourians at Manitou and perhaps as many here in the Springs. A lively crowd of folks will make the day one to be long remembered, and the committees are putting forth their best efforts. All you have to do is to wear a "Show Me" badge to join in the fun. Those who attend are requested to bring regular Missouri picnic baskets, full of good foods.

A DAINY TOILET ARTICLE

Every lady who desires to keep up her attractive appearance, while at the Theater, attending Receptions, when shopping, while traveling and on all occasions, should carry in her purse a booklet of Goussard's Oriental Beauty Leaves. This is a dainty little booklet of exquisitely perfumed powdered leaves which are easily removed and applied to the skin. It is invaluable when the face becomes moist and flushed and is far superior to a powder puff as it does not spill and soil the clothes.

It removes dirt, dust and grease from the face, imparting a cool delicate bloom to the complexion. Sent anywhere on receipt of 10 cents in stamps or coin. E. T. Hopkins, 27 Great Jones St. New York.

The Wister Plumbing and Heating company has filed suit in the district court against Mary J. Ratledge and George Ratledge, alleging $300.00 to be due on account of materials furnished.

Roy Ritter, charged with assault, will be tried in Justice Gowdy's court August 1.

AT Y. M. C. A. TODAY

The Hon. William McDonald, former judge of the superior court of Washington, will address the Y. M. C. A. meeting today at 3:30 o'clock. His subject will be "The Perfect Life." Mrs. Marie Mann, soloist, will sing "The Holy City." A cordial invitation is extended to all.

ENTERTAIN—Mrs. John I. Young entertained Thursday evening in honor of Miss Nellie E. Dougan and Miss Reta Bunnell of Chicago. The guests were Mrs. E. F. Bunnell, Mrs. Bertha Brown, Misses Edith and Stella Crabill, Misses Alma and Bessie Anderson, Miss Bessie Currie and Wallace Crabill.

Interest to nonresident auto owners, was issued officially by Chairman Donaldson yesterday.
"Owing to the fact that quite a large number of out-of-town automobile owners have just arrived, and more are on the way, who will not get here in time to decorate their cars for the Automobile parade, the Carnival committee hereby extends a general invitation to all residents and non-residents to join in the Carnival parade on Monday morning and suggests that nonresidents use either their own state colors or the Carnival colors in connection with their state pennants, as a large cup will be given for the largest state representation, regardless of decoration."
"We cordially invite every nonresident automobile owner to join in making the entries from his state as large as possible."
In addition to the cup offered for the state exhibit a handsome sterling cup will be given to the best decorated car entered by a nonresident.
The marshal and committee in charge of the parade desire that all participants report on North Cascade avenue, in front of the Clockner at 10:30 a. m. in order to prevent any confusion in formation.

Leaders Express Themselves Against Compromise With Senate on Wool.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Democratic leaders of the House adopted anything but a conciliatory tone on the wool tariff situation today.

Chairman Underwood and Representative Harrison of the ways and means committee, and other prominent Democrats expressed themselves tonight in unfriendly terms toward a compromise with the Senate that would mean an increase in the rates of the original Underwood bill.

Meantime President Taft is accredited by those who talked with him today as being determined to veto the bill, when it reaches him.
The situation in the House is the key to the entire tariff issue in Congress. Upon the action of the House early next week rests the possibility of further tariff legislation at this session. Speaker Clark expressed confidence today that a wool bill would be agreed upon in conference and that it would be signed by the President. Other House leaders, however, adopted a more pessimistic view of the President's attitude, and expect the President to veto any bill framed by the present Democratic-Republican coalition in the Senate.

Apparently it is the desire of Chairman Underwood and certain House leaders to take no chances of being placed on record as endorsing a party protective tariff bill. They believe the President will veto any bill and they do not want to be on record in favor of any measure except a straight revenue bill, such as the Underwood bill is claimed to be.

There was no change in the situation in the Senate today, the coalition maintaining its strength and the parties so that combination expressing confidence in their ability to put through revision legislation.

West of Cascade avenue, facing east, cross street below the Clockner, east of Tejon street, facing west.

Fifth Division.

On E. Hagerman street, (the fourth cross street below the Clockner) east of Cascade avenue, facing west.

Sixth Division.

Read guard. On Fontanero street, cars from out of town will be assembled and lined up in their states so as to bring at the cars from each state together. To facilitate this Madison street and Washington street must be left open. On Cascade avenue, cars from each state will be lined up in their states so as to enable the cars to get the cars from each state together in proper order.

Also all cars must keep as far as possible in a single line near the right curb line until assigned definite places in the parade.

The head of the procession will be formed as follows:
Chief Marshal, Chairman of Parade Committee and Chief of Police.

Midland Park City Council, County Commissioners, Fire Department.

Other cars of first division.
Each division will fall in at a last car of the preceding division, across the street on which it is formed.

The speed will be 10 miles an hour except in passing the grandstand, where it will be reduced to five miles an hour.

Intervals of 20 feet are to be maintained between cars and each chauffeur is requested to observe closely the car ahead of him and keep 20 feet behind it at all times.

Cars arriving too late to take their proper places in the procession may follow down Cascade avenue and fall in at the rear of the divisions to which they belong.

In order to facilitate the grouping of out-of-town cars all owners of such cars are requested to carry pennants with the name of the state to which they belong.

Care of the marshal and aides will be identified by distinctive pennants and rosettes in yellow and white.

Owners of cars desiring to compete for prizes are requested to obtain number cards at the headquarters of the committee, 126 North Tejon street and place them on each side of the cars in some conspicuous place so as to facilitate the work of the judges.

CORRECT DRESS AT WEDDINGS

From the Woman's Home Companion
In an article on "The Etiquette of Weddings" Christine Tschune Herrick has the following to say about correct dress.

After the ceremony, if there is to be a reception the guests follow the bride and groom to her home. The bride's mother leaves at the same time as the bride if not before, so that she may be there to greet the guests when they arrive. The bride and her attendants at once take place with her father and mother to meet congratulating relatives and friends. Unless there is a formal collation served the bride does not usually go into the dining room but partakes of some refreshment brought to her in the reception room. The dress for the men is of course always the same for a wedding in the daytime a frock coat light trousers, gray or lavender gloves and a buff or white boutonniere. High hats are on request. The bride if this is her first marriage wears white usually with a veil. Her gown would be made with a high neck and at least with a guimpe and she should wear little or no jewelry. The bridesmaids will look much prettier if all are gowned alike.

The bride presents her bridesmaids and maid of honor with a little gift usually a piece of jewelry and the groom gives his best man and the ushers some little token such as a scarf pin.

HOW A MAID SERVANT FOUNDED A GREAT HOSPITAL

By A. W. Mearns
Guy's Hospital in London is one of the largest institutions of its kind in the world. It was founded by Thomas Guy in 1724 and thereby began a tale. Guy was rich and miserly and in middle age he became engaged to marry one of his maid servants. Tre paratory to the wedding he gave orders for the payment in front of his house to be mounded as far as a particular stone which he marked. In his absence the maid whom he was engaged to marry was watching the workmen and finding a broken plate they had not repaired he called the attention to it. They replied that it was not their business to repair only a far. Well, she said, you mounded it and tell him I told you I am sure he will not be angry. But he was so angry that he broke the engagement, renounced the idea of matrimony altogether and resolved to spend his fortune in building a great hospital which he did.

yet it is not expected by the experts that they will defeat the winged machines of the Wrights. The bird-men will circle over the field at a considerable height, while their competitors on the ground are making ready for the start. In descending spirals and with increasing speed, the aeroplanes will circle closer and closer to the ground directly over the track until with the starting signal they will be sweeping about on a uniform level not many yards above the heads of the auto drivers. The competing machines will be so manipulated that as they approach the starting point they will have an even break, and for a dozen laps of the track the exciting race will be continued. From the standpoint of the spectators in the grandstand, these features of the aviation meets will have the long-distance flights "outdistanced" for fascinating interest.

Many Autoists to Race.

Chief among the auto drivers who will compete with the aviators in the speed trials is A. W. Marksheffel of this city, one of the best and most experienced autoists in the state. Another driver will be picked from among the crack drivers of Denver, and a third may be secured from Pueblo. A number of local motorcyclists will participate, and one or two entries are expected from Denver. Herbert Hazzard, chief engineer and mechanic for the Wrights, with his assistants yesterday unloaded the Wright biplanes from the freight cars in which they came to this city, and removed them to the tents erected for the purpose near the grandstand at Roswell park. The machines have been a jostled ready for the big flights and races to be held Wednesday afternoon and Hazzard predicts that the new Wright model Pike will perform some stunts to open the eyes of aeroplane experts all over the country. The new machine is Wright's pet, for it embodies all his latest ideas in aviation and its performance is expected to establish the premier bird-men of the United States as the greatest in the world. Aviators Parmelee and Turpin will arrive in this city Tuesday. Hazzard says they are the most daring and expert drivers ever employed by the Wrights.

Perfect Arrangements.

The most perfect arrangements for handling the vast crowds expected at Roswell park have been made by Chairman L. P. Lawton and his committee in charge of all events in the park. Four turnstiles have been installed, and a crowd of ticket takers will be on deck so that there will be no trouble in handling the mass of sightseers. The sale of reserved seats and boxes has been very large, according to W. W. Lick, who has charge of the tickets, but reserved seats may be had on every day of the week up to 11 a. m. at the Opera House box office, and after that hour at the park gates, general admission tickets may be secured, but no reservations outside those made at the Opera House can be assured. The sale of reserved tickets for auto positions in the park has been large, and autoists wanting to be sure of a place should purchase at once.

he thrust it away that it might not nip his nose, and so there at his hand was a wasp's nest! It was made of thin wood pulp, softened into a thin paste by the jaws of the insect, then formed and left to dry.

Why can't I do that same thing?" thought the Japanese merchant. "Get certain wood form it into a pulp by means of water from the river and make something like this wasp's nest in consistency to wrap about my packages. So this was the paper wasp was first discovered. A wasp flew across the path of a man who walked one day in a vine-clad garden of Old Japan."

A USE FOR CATTLE HORNS

From the Denver Republican
Cattle horns, which have dotted the prairie for the last 40 years have disappeared and their going marks a new industry that of making tortoise shell combs hairpins and ornaments from the horns. It was a Yankee who came along one day and seeing the heads and horns bleaching on the plains thought of utilizing them for tortoise shell ornaments. He gathered a carload and shipped them east. They were put through a factory, treated with a secret process and as a result the man laid the foundation for a comfortable fortune.

USES FOR COTTON WASTE

From Good Housekeeping Magazine

Watch a man facing the problem of grease, with his motor. He has one un failing remedy—cotton waste. If the machine needs cleaning, he produces his bunch of waste. If the oil is dripping to the floor, a handful of waste removes it. If his hands are greasy, he doesn't use a good towel, and then try to wash it; he uses cotton waste and burns it when it will absorb no more. If women who do their own work would go to the nearest hardware store and buy this inexpensive cotton waste, they would find their labors much lessened. The saucers, or the greasy frying pan, if wiped with the waste soon after being taken from the stove will need nothing more than rinsing. And dishwashing would be made easy if all greasy or sticky dishes were wiped off with the waste before being washed.

W. E. Pabor, Secretary Fountain Colony, Will Attend Carnival

The accompanying account of the driving of the first stake in the town of Colorado Springs, the fortieth anniversary of which will be celebrated this week, was written for The Denver Tribune issue of August 1, 1871, by W. E. Pabor, who attained no little distinction as a writer under the name "Pikes Peak." Mr. Pabor was secretary of the Fountain colony, which founded Colorado Springs. He lived in this city for many years afterward, later removing with his son to a place in Florida, which he named "Pabor Lake" and will be here for the carnival General Cameron whose address as the orator of the day is given in Pabor's account was vice president and manager of the colony. The late Gen. W. J. Palmer was president of the organization.

Pabor's Account.

The ceremony of driving the first stake in the new town of Colorado Springs was witnessed this morning by a large concourse of ladies and situation, let us not forget the magnificent scenery around us. Switzerland may boast of its glacier peaks and its ice-clad mountains, but nowhere is there scenery so grand and so varied and so beautiful as within the scope of our vision as we look out from this favored spot and view the surroundings of our new and beautiful city. Here on our left, rise the Cheyenne mountains, grandly beautiful in their magnificence, sending the lengthening shadows of the afternoon far over the eastward lying plains. Before us looms Pikes Peak, whose glorious dome realizes the poet's dream of beauty—which is to be as it has been for hundreds of unappreciated years, a joy forever. Within sight of us on the right, the Garden of the Gods, Glen Eyrie and Monument park, each with natural attractions sufficient to draw an immense number of visitors from all parts of the country and the world, now that the narrow gauge of the Denver and Rio Grande railway is about to bring it into close and convenient communication with the east.

W. E. PABOR, Secretary of the Fountain Colony, 1871.

gentlemen. The morning was bright and beautiful and everything conspired to make the occasion a success.

At 8 a. m. under the superintendence of General Cameron and Engineer Nettleton, the first stake touched the ground far hands joined in driving it home and at the last home stroke repeated calls for a speech brought out General Cameron as the orator of the hour who said:

"On the important occasion of instituting a new enterprise in this beautiful valley at the confluence of the Monument and Fountain streams, in the most delightful of all situations it is well that we should inaugurate the founding of a new city with ceremonies."

Then we are not to forget and could not if we would the famous soda springs in our immediate vicinity, springs well known to the aborigines of the older days and famous already to the new civilization skirting the border of the Rocky mountains. Around these, thousands of painted war chiefs danced with their followers, casting their tributes of gold and silver in honor of the gods who charged the water with life-giving powers and as they layed they felt their diseases depart from them as the evil spirit departed of old at the touch of the master and giver of life.

"I have yet to see the first one of many hundreds I have met who have sojourned at these springs who has said 'All this I saw and part of this I was.' The general was enthusiastically cheered during and at the close of his speech.

So we drove the first stake home in sight of Pikes Peak's glorious dome.

In Colorado Springs new town—The future city of renown. And so, under the most favorable auspices, the new town of Colorado Springs uplifts its fair countenance from the base of the mountains, offering a welcome to all who come bringing with them the civilization waited for so long, and giving in return a climate and a situation unsurpassed in territory and perhaps in the world.

Among those present we noticed the Misses Flowers of Chicago, Mrs. Nichols, Sanborn and Flowers, Greeley; Mr. Babcock of Penn. Y. N. Y. Secretary Pabor, Assistant Treasurer Kingsley, of the Fountain colony, and others.

nies suitable to the occasion. This is no chimerical enterprise, but is founded and based upon substantial physical facts. If there were no other impediments why men and families should emigrate to this vicinity, that of health alone is sufficient. The famed Pacific coast has its fogs and its vapors—as have the islands of the sea—but in this dry, bracing and invigorating climate every condition of life is combined, the sick are restored to health, pale faces assume the tint of the roses, the aged renew their youth and are filled with fresh vigor and new life.

"This famous spot, sheltered by the divide from the storms of the north is soon to blossom into gardens of beauty and homes where elegance reigns, here will rise groves and orchards, and over these hills the luxuriant vine will climb and yield its fruit in its season to delight the hearts of those who watch its growth beneath the fostering touch of cultivation."

Cities Magnificent Scenery

not been materially relieved or radically cured of troublesome and dangerous diseases and the time is not far distant when invalids from the north and from the south, from the east and from the west, will gather about these healing waters—to drink and be cured.

Prophecies Brilliant Future.

"Having all these advantages and many more we cannot stop to enumerate we can, today, upon laying—as it were—the cornerstone of this new and to-be-flourishing city, and upon driving the first stake, prophesy a most successful growth and brilliant future. In a few weeks the iron horse will startle with its echo the suburbs of the town; civilization will rapidly follow and in a few years, as we look out from the porch of some magnificent temple yet to be built, and see the wealth and beauty thus spread out at our feet, we shall be glad that we can look back to this day and at this simple, yet suggestive ceremony, and

State Insurance Men Meet Here Next Year

Charles T. Fortig of this city, was elected president of the Colorado State Insurance Agents association at the reorganization convention last week in Pueblo, and he has succeeded in securing the next year's convention for Colorado Springs. C. F. Cashman, of Denver, was elected first vice president; B. S. Crockett of Pueblo, second vice president; and C. M. Sampson of Antonito, third vice president. F. H.

Dunnington of Colorado Springs is secretary.

For two years the association has held no meetings and it was thought for a while that it would break up. With the election, however, of new officers, the association has taken a new lease of life, and by the time the convention is ready to go in session here next year it will be one of the liveliest in the state if present plans are carried out.

Mrs. W. E. Braden of Sparta, Ill., has returned home after spending several months with her daughter, Mrs. Edward Holmes Smith.

Wrinkleless Skin Now Easy to Have

(From Family Physician)
There's no excuse for any woman having wrinkles now. It has been found that a simple mixture of salicylic acid and witch hazel has a remarkable action upon the deepest wrinkles, no matter what their nature, whether caused by worry, habitual frowning, a debilitated condition or the ravages of Father Time. This harmless remedy, which anyone can easily make and use at home, acts both as an astringent and a tonic. The combined effect of tightening the skin and brightening its vitality is to immediately affect every line and wrinkle, keeping the entire smooth and firm as in youth.

The proportions are one ounce salicylic acid (powdered) to one-half pint with alcohol. The solution should be used as a wash lotion. It is equally effective in disposing of flabbiness of cheek and neck, as well as sagging below the eyes.

Finds Volunteer Fire Order Given on May 25, 1875

J. P. Barnes, one of the early settlers of Colorado Springs, has run across a copy of an order issued by James E. Wood, foreman of Colorado Springs Fire company No. 1, on May 25, 1875. In view of the approaching celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the founding of this city, and the many pioneers who will attend, the order is of especial interest. It follows:

COLORADO SPRINGS FIRE CO. NO. 1
Headquarters, May 25, 1875.

GENERAL INSTRUCTIONS.
For the proper working of the Engine, the following will constitute permanent details, and as such shall be known as Numbers 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100.

Special Chorus at First Presbyterian Dedication Program

Excellent music and addresses by members of the First Presbyterian church will be features of the dedication exercises held at the church today for the new Sunday school building, which has been erected as an addition to the church. W. E. Argo, W. W. Williamson, H. H. Seldamridge, W. W. Postlethwaite and Dr. J. R. Robinson will talk on the general theme, "Equipment and Opportunity." A feature of the musical program at the Sunday school will be the singing of a chorus of 25 voices led by Mrs. George M. Howe.

The following is the church program:
At 11 A. M., Public Worship.
Organ Prelude, "Piling Wide the Gates" from "The Crucifixion," by Steiner

Offertory (violin solo), "The Stanchen," as arranged by Maiba Elmer Miss Jean Laing.
Solo, "Open the Gates of the Temple," Fred Butler
Evening at 8 o'clock.
Prelude (orchestra), "Offenbach Offertory (organ), "Large" Handel Solo, "The Holy City" (by request), Fred Butler
Violin solo, "Serenata," Moszkowski
Mrs. George M. Howe.
Postlude (organ), "Triumphal Chorus," Gullmant

Y. W. C. A. Notes

The Young Women's Christian association will hold its vesper service as usual this afternoon at 5 o'clock in association rooms, 320 DeGraff building. H. H. Seldamridge will speak on "The Shepherd Psalm." Psalm 23. Miss Clara Hoffmire will sing. A cordial welcome is extended to all women. Strangers are invited to spend this quiet hour in the association rooms. Tea is served after the service.

PLEASED WITH SPRINGS

Mrs. S. A. Cann and Mrs. E. L. Brown of Yazoo City, Miss., are so entranced with Colorado Springs that they have leased quarters in the Acadia hotel for the entire summer. On their arrival here, three days ago, they expected to remain but a day or so. Both are prominent society women of their home city.

NO TRACE OF A. JAMES

Andrew James of 707 North Weber street, who disappeared from his home June 27, expecting to go to a mining claim on Black Mountain, is still missing. For the last two weeks friends have been searching the mountains for him, but no trace of the missing man has been found. Yesterday's brother-in-law, J. Greer, reached here from Illinois to continue the search.

HUNGARIAN IS DETAINED

Wollem Kouvkoon, the Hungarian arrested at the Santa Fe depot Friday night for investigation as to his sanity, is being held at the county jail, pending an examination. He says he was in a railroad wreck a few weeks ago, and it is believed that his mind was affected by the accident.

MANY SOLDIERS COMING

Two hundred more United States troops will arrive in town from Columbus, O., tomorrow to go over the Colorado Midland, bound west to San Francisco. This number, together with 161 troopers from the same city and

MENAGERIE A GRPAT SCHOOL
Circus Day an Important Factor in an Educational Way

An hour can always be spent in a circus menagerie with great pleasure and educational advantage to students of natural history. There is no limit to the lessons to be learned there in comparative zoology. The trouble is, that people are afraid to ask questions of employees of the common run of shows for fear of discourteous replies.
A great deal of interesting and odd information is thus lost.

There need be no fear of such treatment when the Forpaugh and Sells Brothers circus comes to town on Tuesday, August 8.
The management of this show has introduced a new feature in their zoological tent. All visitors are received and conducted through the various aisles and avenues among the pens and cages by uniformed lecturers, especially engaged to answer all questions and impart further information, while experienced trainers demonstrate many strange facts.

This is the only circus in the country that gives any special attention or thought to patrons beyond permitting them to wander around for a short while among the animals and then try to squeeze into the main tent if they can.
They are given no assistance whatever.
With this show it is the aim to amuse people, to instruct them, and by all means to make them comfortable. If one uses his eyes and is not afraid to ask questions, he will pick up any amount of odd information.

For example, he will learn that a giraffe can utter no sound and can ro-longer than a camel without food and water; that an elephant does not smell with its trunk and can feel the bite of a fly; that unicorns are bred in Siberia; that a hippopotamus exudes blood from its pores when angry; that the male ostrich sits on the eggs, that the female kangaroo carries its young in a pouch, that a rhinoceros eats less than a dog; that the best of oriental lace is made from the hair of the yak; that the South African vlek yak, or vlek hog, has warts on its nose only during times of plenty and when hard times comes the warts disappear; that there are two distinct feathers on every quill in the emu's back.

The menagerie of the Adam For-paugh and Sells Brothers' circus is a complete zoological chain. Nothing that has any attractive value is missing. In fact, there are many specimens on exhibition that never before have been seen in America. There are 750 animals in all. Among them, besides those already mentioned, are lions, zebras, tigers, panthers, gnus, anteaters, tapirs, peccaries, llamas, chimpanzees, mandrills, kangaroos, porcupines, horned horses, zebras, zebrulas, sacred oxen, water buffalo, Philippine cattle, dromedaries, a vast collection of odd types of fish and fowl and every variety of the cat, bear, deer and monkey-tribes.

An amusing and interesting feature of the menagerie is the nursery, where many animal babies are displayed in company with their ferocious parents.

MADE TO BE HUNG

ROME, July 29.—A fierce battle was recently waged in the streets of Naples between the police and the Camorra. The former had gone in a body to execute a warrant for the arrest of Vincenzo Grandullo, the new supreme head of this sanguinary society, in the Monte Calvario district of the city. They had secured their man, and were hurrying him along to the Carabinieri barracks hard by, when they were suddenly held up at a sharp corner by a big band of Camorristi armed with daggers and revolvers. Grandullo's brother, who was at their head, demanded the instant release of the Camorra chief. A bloody affray followed. Amidst the incessant din of firearms, freely used on either side, Inspector Castoldi, was mortally wounded, and Police Officer Di Paolo had his skull stove in by heavy sticks, and lies at the point of death in the military hospital.

Though several Camorristi ringleaders were shot in the arms and legs all succeeded in escaping except the successor of Ericone, who is now on trial at Viterbo. Even this prisoner was later recaptured in the main thoroughfare of Naples.

CAILLAUX SAFE FOR AWHILE

BERLIN, July 29.—In the very midst of the din of the Morocco affairs, the new French cabinet Caillaux had its first skirmish with the ever unruly and capricious chamber of deputies. One of the votes taken went against the new government, and, according to the rules of the political poker game as played in France, M. Caillaux should have resigned. He demanded to be given free hands for the debate on the election reform, but the chamber showed its ugly yellow fangs and rejected the minister's proposal. Had M. Caillaux shown less common sense and resigned, those who had been counting his fall would have been disappointed by the whole nation, but a loophole was found and the very next day a very docile and cowed chamber gave him a splendid vote of confidence. Simultaneously the senate finished its ### debate on the budget, and in a few days M. Caillaux will be able to feel safe in his seat at least until the French parliament meets again after its summer vacation.

LONDON, July 29.—After going through the coronation, with its continuous round of strenuous pleasures, the visit to Ireland, the investiture of the Prince of Wales at Caernarvon castle, and the visit to Scotland, King George is now enjoying a spell of comparative rest, but his travels will not be over for many months yet.

Early in August he will visit May Hall, near Inverness, to shoot over the famous grouse moors of the Mackintosh of the Mackintosh, twenty-eighth chief of the clan Chattan. As the Prince of Wales, King George shot over the moors, and made a record score in one day. Every morning at 5 o'clock the piper marches around the house playing Scottish airs; while in the evenings, after dinner, he discourses music in the drawing room, where stands the table at which Prince Charlie dined after the battle of Culloden, the sword worn by Dundee at Killcrankie, another that belonged to Charles I. and a gold watch which belonged to Mary Queen of Scots.

From May the king will probably go to Eaton hall, the famous country seat of the Duke and Duchess of Westminster, where he will meet the king and queen of Spain. King Alfonso is coming to Eaton to celebrate the annual Eaton polo week, being a daring and splendid player of the game.

STANDARD OIL GRANTED MORE TIME TO DISSOLVE

ST. LOUIS, Mo., July 28.—A decree modifying the original order for the dissolution of the Standard Oil company was filed in the United States circuit court here today. The modification extends until December 21 the dissolution of the corporation and the privilege of asking for more time should the company find itself unable to wind up its affairs by that time is granted.

Harriman Suit Is to Be Appealed to the Highest Court

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The government will appeal to the supreme court the Harriman merger suit which was decided in favor of the railroads by the United States circuit court at St. Louis.

Attorney General Wickersham today directed C. A. Severance, the government's special counsel in the case, to prepare the appeal and file it as quickly as possible.

Although the government has a year in which to perfect its action to the highest court, the department of justice intends to hurry the suit. Opinions have been expressed in some quarters that the government's appeal would be only a routine matter to have the questions involved decided by the highest court. At the department of justice, however, it is said the government is appealing the case in the hope of winning it. Mr. Severance has reported to the attorney general that he believes the government has a good chance.

It has been suggested to the government that the outcome of the Harriman merger suit might have some bearing on the great holding company which it has been reported is to be organized for the New York Central lines. Attorney General Wickersham, however, said the proposed New York Central company had not been called to his attention, and would express no opinion.

FATAL HEAT WAVE IS BURNING UP GERMANY

BERLIN, July 28.—There is no break in the heat wave. The weather bureau announces that the temperature throughout the interior yesterday averaged 85 degrees and that higher marks were reached today. There is no immediate prospect of relief. Many fatalities due to the heat are reported throughout the country.

TORN SHIRT OFF BACK TO PREVENT A WRECK

ELLSFORTH, N. C., July 28.—With a shirt torn from his back, Robert Cook of Degraff today flagged Big Four flyer No. 44 at Quincy curve, probably saving the 180 passengers from death. Cook, while walking along the tracks discovered a broken rail. Running half a mile up the track he stopped at the train.

Two Witnesses Heard Briefly and Investigated Allegedly Until Monday.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Lawrence B. Stringer, Democratic candidate for senator against Lorimer, testifying before the Lorimer election committee today, told of Lorimer's popularity with the Democratic legislators but at the conclusion of his evidence expressed the opinion that improper or corrupt practices were an ingredient entering into Lorimer's election.

Edward O. Phillips, a Chicago Record-Herald reporter, who worked in Springfield during the session of the legislature in 1909 was the only other witness today. He said former Governor Yates was his authority for a newspaper article he wrote on January 6, 1909, to the effect that Lorimer would be elected by the combination of Democrats and Republicans that elected Shurtleiff speaker. If Lorimer would consent, Phillips said in conversation with Lawrence B. Stringer the day before the election of Lorimer he gathered the impression that Stringer was out of the race because a "consideration" had been asked of him that he could not furnish.

The committee adjourned until Monday, when Phillips will be cross-examined.

American Financier Has Reputation of Being Liberal Giver to Those Who Assist Him

LONDON, July 28.—Fierpont Morgan has gained a reputation for generous tipping among London cabmen, porters and other branches of the itching palm fraternity. This is illustrated by a little incident that occurred recently on Piccadilly. The financier was alone in the tonneau of his big red touring car, which was whizzing at a good, slick pace, when the breeze lifted his straw hat and deposited it in the roadway.

The auto pulled up some 200 yards further on, and Mr. Morgan alighted and started to walk back for his "lid." Meanwhile an alert young taxicabby picked up the hat, which had stopped close to his cab, and jumping into the seat went in pursuit of the Morgan machine. The hatless connoisseur, thanking him cordially, rewarded him

THE COLORADO SPRINGS SPIRIT.

BEGINNING tomorrow and continuing to the end of the week, Colorado Springs will give for the benefit of both citizens and visitors a concrete demonstration of a new and powerful force in this community the Colorado Springs Spirit. We may as well confess that this spirit has been wanting in the past, it did not come into existence until the beginning of the present year when the older civic bodies were consolidated into a new and more aggressive Chamber of Commerce.

This event was the turning point in Colorado Springs. It marked the end of the old era of self-satisfaction, an era, the dominant note of which might be summed up in the expression that "Providence has been so gloriously good to Colorado Springs that it was not necessary for the people to do anything in their own behalf."

The birth of the new Chamber of Commerce was a protest against this sentiment. It was an expression of the feeling that in this age a city does not advance along the best and broadest lines unless its people put their shoulders to the wheel and push, persistently and consistently. On every side we have the example of other cities, much less favorably situated than Colorado Springs, which have pushed their way to the front and won fame and prosperity by the application of up-to-date methods of promotion.

This lesson has been learned by the progressive citizens of Colorado Springs, and they have applied it to their own needs with force and directness. They have organized a civic body in which every one of the 700 members considers himself not merely a contributor, but an active, working force, ready at all times to give his time, his energy, and his money to the advancement of the greater welfare of Colorado Springs. Today the Chamber of Commerce is the most potent force for the upbuilding of a bigger, better, more prosperous and more beautiful city that Colorado Springs has ever had. It unifies and gives expression to the public spirit of the people, and it has been the means of creating a genuine and altogether distinctive Colorado Springs Spirit.

ORIGIN OF SUMMER CARNIVAL IS AN EXPRESSION OF THIS SPIRIT.

The Colorado Springs Summer Carnival is an expression of one phase of this spirit. It was first suggested in an editorial published in The Gazette, June 16, 1910, in which attention was called to the fact that on July 31, 1911, Colorado Springs would be just 40 years old. In that editorial we urged that at an early date preparations be started for a fitting observance of this anniversary, and that a program be prepared for the ensuing week with such features as would make the occasion notable both for our own citizens and our summer visitors. This suggestion was repeated in another editorial published February 22, 1911, in which The Gazette again urged the importance of immediate preparations for a Summer Carnival. At that time we said:

"Such a celebration as ought to be held in this city next summer will require many months of careful planning. It is none too early now to begin the preliminary work, and The Gazette submits this suggestion to the Chamber of Commerce in the belief that this public-spirited body will act without unnecessary delay by appointing a committee to organize the movement. Full discussion of the subject will bring to light various ideas to add to the completeness of the celebration, and with plenty of energy and hard work it can be made the most notable event in the city's history."

This was followed within a few days by the appointment of a special committee, with Mr. George B. Tripp as Chairman, and this Committee has labored unceasingly to make the Carnival not merely the greatest event of its kind in the history of Colorado Springs, but also the most noteworthy celebration ever held in the State. Its members without exception are busy men, but they have given unsparingly of their time and energy to make the Summer Carnival such a success as would insure its repetition in succeeding years as an additional entertainment for our summer visitors.

IT IS SCARCELY NECESSARY TO ADD THAT THE WORK OF THE COMMITTEE WOULD HAVE BEEN FUTILE WITHOUT THE CO-OPERATION OF THE BUSINESS MEN, THE CITY OFFICIALS AND HUNDREDS OF OTHERS WHO HAVE SHOWN IN A SUBSTANTIAL WAY THAT THEY BELIEVE IN THE FUTURE OF COLORADO SPRINGS.

First of all it was necessary to obtain the sinews of war, and at this point the Colorado Springs Spirit became manifest. The Committee experienced little, if any, difficulty in raising the necessary funds, for almost without exception business men responded with generous subscriptions. "All together for a bigger and better Colorado Springs," has been the watchword, and a willingness to aid financially and by service on committees has been evident at all times.

There is no doubt about the overwhelming success of the Summer Carnival. Preparations have been made with the utmost thoroughness. Money has been spent lavishly by the Carnival Committee, by the City authorities and by hundreds of individuals to decorate the streets and make the city as attractive as possible. The program provides an unending round of amusement, not of the stereotyped variety but embracing features of genuine novelty and rare entertainment value.

It is safe to say that the city will be so thronged with visitors throughout the week that even its extraordinary housing facilities will be taxed to the utmost. For the next week Colorado Springs will be the host of the Middle West and the Rocky Mountain region, and it is not in the least worried as to its ability to play the part gracefully. It only hopes that its visitors will come early, stay late, and have such a good time that they will be induced to come again and again.

OPEN PARLIAMENT

TAFT AND THE WOOL SCHEDULE.

To the Editor of The Gazette
Referring to your editorial in this morning's Gazette I am not quite able to see how President Taft will be placed in an embarrassing position if Congress passes the pending act to reduce the Payne Aldrich tariff on wool and woolen goods. That tariff causes our people to pay about double the amount which they should pay for all their woolen goods. When they pay $10 for a suit of clothes they pay about $20 extra because of the tariff tax when they buy a blanket for $5 they pay about $2.50 extra for tariff tax. Nearly all of this extra cost goes into the pockets of the eastern manufacturers not to the laborers who make the goods nor to the wool growers. It seems to me impossible for any sane man to honestly claim that this tariff tax is just. It needed no declaration from President Taft to show that it was indefensible.

Now if Congress passes an act relieving the people of about two-thirds of this indefensible and unnecessary burden it seems that the President should rejoice at the opportunity to sign the act and thereby do his part to give relief from unjust taxation. The fact that many Democratic members support the act should not embarrass him. His famous reciprocity act was supported by nearly all of the Democratic members of Congress and it was opposed by a majority of the Republican members yet he signed it with alacrity. He depended on the Democrats for the votes necessary to pass it.

If the act is passed and the President vetoes it and thereby becomes responsible for the continuance of this "indefensible" burden on the people his friends cannot even guess what he will do next.

WILLIAM C. ROBINSON

FROM OTHER PENS

NOT MUCH NEARER THE TRUTH.

The opinion that the wreck of the Maine was caused by an internal explosion is not illuminating. No one ever doubted that the magazines of the Maine exploded. No one ever doubted that when they exploded they blew the masts, the rigging and the deck outward. No one doubted that the explosion is and always has been, what caused the magazines to explode? The accepted theory has been that the explosion of a mine or torpedo under the keel of the Maine caused the explosion of the magazines. How the mine or torpedo got beneath the Maine, who put it there and how it came to explode, these are the real questions, perhaps, that will never be answered. But there is no doubt that the explosion, however it may have occurred, was the force that drove the last remnant of Spanish power out of the new world, which Spain discovered and dominated through many years, and out of the Philippine Islands. It was also an explosion that blew open the lid of a Pandora's box for the United States of America.

BAD CONDITIONS AT THE SOUTH.

From the San Francisco Chronicle
At a recent convention of cottonseed oil producers, representing an industry carried on largely in the south, by about 800 suffering corporations, Judge Henry C. Hammond of Augusta, Ga., is quoted as speaking as follows:

The lawless and rampant competition, the guerrilla warfare, which goes on between the oil mill men, must be stopped by some means. It is not good business. I venture to believe that your business may be even now controlled and regulated by perfectly lawful and understandable means. This was not a deliverance from the bench, but from the rostrum, and therefore highly "obiter." Nevertheless, it was a direct suggestion from a person of judicial character to "combine" against the "interests" which were oppressing the corporations represented in his audience.

To suppose, upon inquiry, that in this case the monopolistic and shameless "interests" are the farmers who grow cotton and who, by means of an organization so much more powerful than any which the miserable corporations have been able to invent, have raised the price of raw cotton seed to an extortionate figure, threatening ruin to the 800 milling corporations, who are unable to pass on the extortion to the consumer by reason of the competition of other vegetable oils.

Clearly the one disadvantaged farmers of the south have joined the "interests."

The situation is perplexing. If the cottonseed, oil, men combine to resist the extortion of the farmers, should they be put in jail? Or should the farmers be jailed for monopolizing and extorting? Or should nothing whatever be done about it? What is the "reasonableness" of the situation anyway?

THE MORNING COMETH.

From the Pittsburgh Gazette-Times
When even Germany looks favorably upon the arbitration idea, the millennium is indeed looming up on the horizon.

"THE WHITE CHIEF'S" ENTRY.

From the New York Mail
Somewhat as Tamburlaine comes on the scene in Kit Marlowe's drama of that name, "the pampered ruler of Asia" drawing his chariot, so James Vardaman, ex-governor of the state of Mississippi, the politician who always spells "Negro" with two "s's," entered Meridian One hundred and sixty years ago, all white, pulled his chariot, an ox-carriage, and preceded by a white-lad torch bearer. The candidate himself—Vardaman wants to succeed Perry in the Senate in 1918—was dressed in white linen, a white hat covering his long hair. White steamers bore the legend "Vote for the White Chief and Uphold the White South."

An impressive bit of mimicry and reminiscence of the dear, dead days when the masked riders of the Ku-Klux Klan made life more or less pleasant in the Southland.

LA FOLLETTE

From the New York Evening Post
Senator La Follette thundered in the index yesterday with denunciations of reciprocity, the President, Ballinger, the newspapers, the railroads and other things that harrow his soul. He was ostensibly discussing the first of these topics but when one sets out to talk for five days and with the object of outwitting his colleagues but of storing up ammunition for a later fight, it is little wonder that he should dig out a variety of topics. Long before he finishes there promises to be ample illustration of Webster's figure of the mariner, tossed for many days in thick weather and on an unknown sea waiting for a pause in the storm in order to ascertain how far he has been driven from his true course. What particularly breaks the senator's heart is President Taft's trifling with the sacred principle of party regularity. This worship of the platform comes oddly from La Follette.

A HARD-WORKED MAN

From the Boston Globe
Perhaps we do not realize it but the President of the United States is one of the hardest worked men in the republic. The head of a big corporation, a U. S. Senator, for instance, can slip away to Europe and the organization will run itself until he returns, but the President is surrounded as he is by a corps of capable assistants and advisers, must be on the job practically every day in the year. Today William H. Taft is the busiest official who holds a high elective position. A governor can get away from official cares—although his pay may be docked if he stays away too long—but the President must get his vacation in dribsels. His vacations consist of 15-minute intervals in which nobody actually is waiting to see him.

THE CHIT CHAT

BY RUTH CAMERON
There were already six ill-assorted people two distinct groups which had never met before when three more people who were acquainted with but two of the original six came upon the veranda the other evening.

After the introductions had been made, someone spoke about the weather and we talked about that for the next five or six minutes each generously contributing information regarding just how hot it had been on his particular thermometer and a few details on just how surprisingly well or wretchedly ill he had slept or eaten during the hot weather.

And then a silence fell. One of those uncomfortable squinty, noisy silences during which each member of the company wonders why on earth someone else doesn't speak up and wildly searches his mind for something appropriate to say.

It lasted about 20 seconds by the clock. Measured by our discomfort it seemed much nearer 20 minutes. Finally it was broken by two people starting to speak at once.

Pining themselves in collision, each precipitately apologized the other that what he was about to say was of no importance and tried to withdraw from the arena of public attention.

After much urging, one was finally prevailed upon to speak and contributed a remark which was of interest only to her particular group, comprising three people.

"Now what am I driving at with all this?" I don't wonder you ask. Well I'll tell you. I've used up so much space in describing this very commonplace little scene merely because it is so commonplace.

I don't believe there's a single person in my audience who hasn't taken part in such awkward silences.

And every time you are a participant aren't you just cross at yourself?

I am.

I think every such silence is an accusation of abominable lack of social intelligence against those who permit it.

I think all ought to have some definite stock topics which could be introduced in any group at any time no matter how ill-assorted it may be.

There's always the weather, of course, and then there's the current play and the latest novel and the interesting piece of news in the day's paper—a mention of any of these things and a question as to your listeners' opinions upon it, will start a conversational ball a rolling which will probably go far before it stops.

Make up your mind that you will keep some such fund of topics at your hand and don't be afraid to launch one of them whenever an awkward silence seems imminent and I assure you you will soon be beloved as the hostess' friend.

PSALMS 91:1-11.
He that dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress: my God in him will I trust.

Springs shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler, and from the noisome pestence.

He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shall thou trust: his truth shall be thy shield and buckler.

Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night; nor for the arrow that flieth by day.

Nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness; nor for the destruction that wasteth at noonday.

A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand: but it shall not come nigh thee.

Only with thine eyes shalt thou behold and see the reward of the wicked.

Because thou hast made the Lord, which is my refuge, even the most High, thy habitation.

There shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling.

For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways.

THE OAK TREE

O, old oak tree! O, brown oak tree! Something in thy great shade bidding give the deepest heart of me! There's a thousand years of anguish, and a thousand years of agony, With ten thousand more asloping in such infant action form! There's a grandeur, and a wonder, and great thoughts of things-to-be! There's strange comfort, like an old friend in thee, brown oak tree!

How often childish fingers wove thy leaves in garments green, With the helmets brave and glistening soldiers fit to serve a queen. Accoutrements we quaffed, and gayly pledged our childish loyalty To the great kings of our home woods, To thee, old oak tree!

O, sad old oak tree! Dear old oak tree! In October, as we bore her hence, who was all things to me— Softly, softly through the sunshine fell a greeting and farewell— 'Twas a leaf that fluttered downward, Turning, as it fell, How one whose eyes had watched you, known you tenderly and long.

Now your crisp leaves rustled faintly as the mourners passed along: 'Twas a day of strange, sad memories! Leaf and sunshine mocked me! Old brown woods remained unchanged— Woods and streams, and old oak tree— ELLA TRUE CONNER Fairbury, Neb.

IN THE EARLY DAYS

THIRTY YEARS AGO TODAY

July 30, 1881.
The Methodist Episcopal church under the pastorate of the Rev. W. L. Shultz closed a most successful year as shown by the report issued.

A musical and literary entertainment was given in the Opera House by Mrs. Laura Dainty and Madame Rita.

A large party of excursionists from Cleveland and other points in Ohio traveling on a special train, were in the city.

Baseball teams from the voucher and freight departments of the Denver and Rio Grande general offices, then in this city, played an interesting game. The voucher department team won, 12 to 10.

James D. Mulken of Colorado City received his final naturalization papers.

Mrs. W. F. Cody and Miss Cody, wife and daughter of "Buffalo Bill" of North Platte, Neb., arrived at the Antlers on their way to Denver.

D. B. Robinson, formerly general manager of the Colorado Midland railroad, and a party of friends spent the day in Colorado Springs. They later left for the south in Mr. Robinson's private car.

History has always attached much importance to the Number Seven. Of all numbers there is no one which commanded, in a higher degree, the esteem and reverence of mankind. The Gazette has taken this charmed number, and has woven into stories on a variety of subjects a Series of Sevens, beginning each Monday and continuing during the week.

NO. 7 CHESS

Notwithstanding the many conjectures which have been hazarded, the origin of the game of chess is unknown, though it is certain that it is of very remote antiquity, and more than probable that it first made its appearance in Asia.

John de Vigne wrote a work which he called "The Moralization of Chess" in which he assures us that the game was invented by a philosopher named Xerxes in the reign of Evil Merodach.

King of Babylon and was made known to that monarch in order to engage his attention and to correct his manners.

"There are three reasons," says De Vigne, which induced the philosopher to institute this new pastime: the first to reclaim a wicked king, the second, to prevent idleness, the third, practically to demonstrate the nature and necessity of nobleness. He then adds:

"The game of chess passed from the hands of Xerxes to the hands of the Persians, and thence to the hands of the Greeks, the Romans, the Arabs and the Saracens, who are said to be admirable players at chess, and modeled the story of De Vigne, and adapted it to their own country, changing the name of the philosopher from Xerxes to Siss."

Though it is not known when the game of chess was first brought into England, yet there is good reason to suppose it was well known there at least a century before the Conquest, and that it was then a favorite pastime with persons of the highest rank.

Mr. Singer thinks that the game was unknown in Europe previous to the crusades, and that it did not reach England before the Twelfth century.

The game is one of extraordinary complication and difficulty. It has been generally practiced by the greatest warriors and generals, and some have even supposed that it was necessary for a military man to be a perfect master of it. The interest which it excites is such as usually to engross the attention of those who engage in it, to the exclusion of all other objects.

Even of the most pressing moment we read that "Tamerlane, who was a great chess player, was engaged in a game during the very time of the decisive battle with Bajazet, the Turkish emperor, who was defeated and taken prisoner. It is also related of Al

Amir, the Khalif of Bagdad that he was engaged at chess with his friend, Kuthur, at the time when Al-Masnun's forces were carrying on the siege of that city with so much vigor that it was on the point of being carried by assault. Dr. Hyde quotes an Arabic history of the Saracens in which the Khalif is said to have cried out, when warned of his danger: "Let me alone for I see a checkmate against Kuthur."

Daniel relates that Prince Henry, the youngest son of the Conqueror, afterwards Henry the First, who, with his brother Robert went to the court of the French king after dinner won so much money of Louis, the king's eldest son that he lost his temper, reproached him with the base birth of his father, and threw the chess men in his face. Henry took up with such force that he drew blood and would have killed him but for the interference of his brother Robert who got him away.

We are told that Charles the First was at chess when news was brought of the final intention of the Scots to sell him to the English, but so little was he discomposed by this alarming intelligence, that he continued his game with the utmost composure, so that no person could have known that the letter he received had given him information of anything remarkable.

A STORY OF CHIPETA

AS TOLD BY MRS. MARGARET T. ADAMS AND RAY M. MASTERTON

THE coming of Chipeta, the famous wife of the great Indian chief, Ouray, to this city to take part in the Carnival festivities this week, stirs up memories of many thrilling incidents of the early history of this region. Chipeta has not been in this city for many years, though in the early days she was a frequent visitor here and spent much time in this vicinity. When it was decided to bring a tribe of Indians to this city, S. N. Nye, who is in charge of the Indian feature of the festival, sent word to the Indian agent that, if at all possible, he would like to have Chipeta come with the Indians. It happened that Chipeta, whose home is in Utah, was visiting an intimate friend of hers, Buckskin Charley, whose tribe the local carnival board had decided to secure. An invitation was immediately sent to Chipeta by Mr. Nye, who knows her well. She accepted it.

Chipeta is well remembered by the old inhabitants of Colorado Springs, among whom she has many friends. Mrs. Margaret T. Adams, wife of General Adams, of the Meeker massacre fame, has told the writer many very interesting things about Chipeta, Ouray, the early days in this region and other matters of intense interest. Mrs. Adams' word pictures of Indian life are vivid, drawn from a rare source of wealth of memory, of actual experiences and acquaintances. The following story of Chipeta brings out a side of the Indian's life which we of today are apt to overlook. The strange nobility of the race, the remarkable humanity of its women and the strength and courage of its people. In listening to Mrs. Adams, one marvels at the vividness of her descriptions, the clear and concise manner in which she describes the scenes of long ago. Her face lights up as she recalls the happy times she has gone through and it is as eloquent as her words in telling of the wrongs of the Indians, the hardships of the whites and the struggles and the sufferings everyone had to endure. And, I venture to say, were glad to endure, in shaping the destiny of the wonderful state of Colorado and the beautiful city of Colorado Springs.

"By many, Chipeta would be called a savage," said Mrs. Adams, "but she has not one savage instinct in her nature. I knew her and her husband, Ouray, very well. Ouray was a good man and also a good Indian, even during his life, notwithstanding the brutal remark that 'the only good Indian is a dead Indian.' He was always true in his friendship for the people of Colorado. When asked what recompense he wished for certain services he had rendered the whites, he answered: 'I wish only to be remembered as the friend of my white brothers and the state of Colorado, once all Utes' country, a noble sentiment expressing the real character of the man. His wish has been granted. A town and a county in the state bear his name and his portrait has been placed in the dome of our capitol.'"

"Though Ouray has been honored thus, his wife, Chipeta, the faithful friend and companion, whose influence and counsel were always helpful to him, is forgotten. For years she has been forced to live on a barren reservation in Utah where even an experienced farmer could not make a living, much less an Indian woman. Chipeta is growing old. She is already over 60 years. She is unused to work. During her lifetime, as the wife of Ouray, she had a retinue of handmaids, women of her tribe who waited upon her. No queen was ever more loyal or faithfully attended than she. She did headwork instead of handwork. Consequently at this late day she is unprepared for the struggle which she has been facing for many years. The Utah reservation is not a good grazing country. There are many streams, but only modern methods of irrigation can make these streams available for practical purposes. If this were done, the Indians might raise cattle and sheep on which they could subsist.

"When I first knew Chipeta, she was the brightest and most handsome squaw in the tribe. Her name, Chipeta, 'Little Singing Bird,' was typical of her nature. She was always laughing, always singing, always doing kind acts toward the poorest of her people who loved her greatly. I wish I could find an early picture of Chipeta to show you. She was beautiful, more beautiful than any Indian squaw I have ever seen."

The picture which is reproduced on this page is one taken of Chipeta several years ago. She has not changed materially since this photograph was made. Chipeta is about five feet tall, the average size of the women of her tribe, but like many short women, she is a dynamo of energy, of strength, of courage, of heart and of mind.

"Chipeta often visited me at my home. She spent much time there. I was very fond of her and I believe she was of me. I remember once of going to see her at the agency in those early days when the Utes lived in this part of the country. She came up to me, saying: 'Adams squaw like Indian. Other white squaw say 'Go away, Dirty Indian.' Adams squaw she take Indian. She love Chipeta.' Chipeta loved little children and it always pleased her when I would take a papoose in my arms. The other white women who visited the agency kept apart from the Indians because they were not always clean and had that peculiar odor characteristic of the Indians."

"Chipeta was a real woman, a woman who was wife, mother, stateswoman all in one. I wish people could understand this. Indians are not the savage beasts most people imagine. When General Adams took Ouray and other chiefs to Washington, D. C., to confirm a certain treaty, Chipeta went with us. She was dressed in her fine buckskin costume, elaborately embroidered with beads. She attracted much attention and was greatly admired, but she was not at all dazzled or overcome by the scenes around her. She behaved as though accustomed to such things all her life, never ill at ease, and yet, up until this time, she had never been off the reservation. The wife of a modern ambassador could not have surpassed Chipeta in self-possession, in distinguished behavior or carriage."

"Presently she was showered upon her which pleased her greatly, for among her people, presents were an expression of love and affection, a more beautiful sentiment. I fear, than that which promotes the gifts among the so-called civilized races. She had 'rings on her fingers' as many as they would hold, given her by Washington Indians, and would, no doubt, have had 'bells on her toes' but for the fact that her little feet were encased in beautifully embroidered moccasins according to the Indian custom."

"Chipeta came home, not at all spoiled. She had learned and had seen many things. She admired the white women and their ways. From that time on she was more and more the companion and the helpmate of Ouray. Combining the qualities of the Indian squaw with those she had learned from the white woman, she made a splendid wife. She realized the greatness of our nation and of our people, so when the dark days of the Meeker massacre came upon her tribe, Chipeta knew what to do."

"I think nothing shows Chipeta's character, the beauty of her life, the nobility of her mind, and the wonderful maternal instinct and feeling she CHIPETA, wife of the famous Indian chief, Ouray, has come to this city to take part in the Carnival festivities. Because of the unusual part Chipeta played in history of the early days of Colorado, the following brief summary of her career is given as related by Mrs. Margaret T. Adams, wife of General Adams, who became famous for his diplomatic dealings with the Indians. Chipeta has camped with other Indians at the foot of Cheyenne mountain. Her life is one of great interest because of the rare quality of this truly remarkable Indian woman.

CHIPETA, WIFE OF OURAY.
This famous Indian squaw is visiting the city this week, taking part in the carnival festivities. Chipeta was a conspicuous figure in the early days of settlement in this region. She was the wife of Ouray, of the Meeker massacre fame.

Life at the Walls

From the Kansas City Sunday Times.
Dobe Walls was an old fort constructed long years ago in Northwest Texas by traders from Santa Fe. In 1874 a number of buffalo hunters from Dodge City took up headquarters in its ruins, and there was fought a desperate battle between the hunters and a combined and overwhelming force of Cheyennes, Arapahoes, Comanches and Kiowas. The incident is utilized by Alfred Henry Lewis in his book, "The Sunset Trail," of which William Barclay Masterton, commonly called Bat, is the "leading man."

Inez was a mustang—a small, wild thing, and the pet of "Dobe" Walls. Those Indians who came calling at the "Dobe" Walls snuffed suspiciously at Inez and said that she was the "White Man's Medicine." When put on the scales and weighed, Inez kicked the beam at seventy pounds, or about one-eighth of what she might have weighed had she lived out the life designed for her by Providence, and escaped the dwarfing influences of bread and milk furnished by Mr. Hanrahan's black cook.

Inez's share in the life of "Dobe" Walls began in this way: The horse hunter had found Inez and her little mother mother visiting among the ponies when he went to make his morning round. The mother fled like a shadow, but Inez, then in her babyhood and something the size of a Jackrabbit, fell into the hands of the horse hunter. That personage of ponies rode into camp with Inez in his arms, and presented her as a common charge. She was adopted and made much of, and soon forgot her griefs and her little mother whinnying among the hills. Except that she ceased to grow, civilization agreed with Inez. . . . If time hung heavy, Mr. Wright or Mr. Masterton would clench a small saddle-tree onto Inez. Thereafter, our people, and arched her small spine, dropped her velvet muzzle between her fetlocks—as slender as a woman's wrists—and sunbathed about the scene. Inez did not have to be trained to this trick; it was in her blood and she "bucked" by instinct.

"Dobe Walls consisted of Mr. Wright's store, Mr. Kimball's blacksmith shop and Mr. Hanrahan's saloon. . . . The fixed population counted eleven at roll call, but, what with the coming and going of the buffalo hunters, there were few moments of any day or night when a count of noses would not have shown more than a score. The public ate its meals in the saloon, which Mr. Hanrahan turned into a restaurant three times a day."

Inez came with the rest to these camps and stood behind the benches and looked over the shoulders of her friends. This she did because it was her privilege and not by virtue of any tooth of hunger. If by design or accident the door were closed, Inez wheeled indignant tail and testified to a sense of injury with her heels. . . . When it rained Inez took shelter in the saloon. Also, she passed her hours of leisure there, for while Inez declined intoxicants and went committed to water as much as any temperance lecturer, the company she found in Mr. Hanrahan's was to her liking, being more unbuttoned and at ease than were those busy ones of the stores—dear with their foolish barter.

The June night had been sweltering hot. In the store and about the clay floor of Mr. Hanrahan's saloon, blankets bedded and sound asleep, lay twenty-one men. Most of them were buffalo hunters, all equal to death at four hundred yards with one of their heavy guns. There were no pickets, since there were no suspicions. Suddenly there was a pattering racket of rub-a-dub-dub on the sleeping ears. It was Inez beating an ecstatic long roll with the door for a drum.

Mr. Masterton sat up and rubbed his eyes. He glanced toward the door; it was not closed. Inez, standing inside, continued to beat it with her hoofs by way of tocsin. Mr. Masterton arose to talk it over with Inez and learn and locate her aches. As Mr. Masterton drew near the door, his quick eye caught a movement under the cottonwoods that half a mile away fenced the Canadian.

"Indians!" he shouted.

Every man of the twenty-one in the store and saloon was on his feet like magic. Once aroused, the "Dobe Walls" was instantly an armed fort.

The Indians made a gorgeous charge. There was a red line of them, five hundred strong—picked fighters of the Cheyennes, the Arapahoes, the Kiowas and the Comanches. To give them spirit and add elixir to the fray, two hundred of their friends from the Pawnees and Osages had come to see the fight. These copper gentlemen of peace and curiosity were seated upon a near-by hill, like an audience at a bullfight. It was a pageant to remember.

That swarm of the red five hundred over the half mile of grassy flat between the cottonwoods and "Dobe Walls": Great war bonnets of eagles' feathers floated from every head. The manes and tails of the ponies streamed with ribbons. On they swept, each buck managing with his knees his saddleless, hideless little war horse.

furnished notice of her displeasure. Inez had gotten the hint of that line of copper battle, and fled for refuge to Mr. Hanrahan's saloon. It was her contempt for Indians, expressed on Mr. Hanrahan's door, that brought out the "Dobe Walls" to defend its hair.

The charging Indians were a minute covering the space between those river cottonwoods and the "Dobe Walls, where the buffalo guns so hopefully awaited them. . . . In that opening charge they did not employ rifles. At ranges not to run over a hundred yards the arrow would do as well. Every one of those missiles came swarming off the bowstring with a venal force that would have sent it smoothly, cleanly through a buffalo calf. And they must save their rifles for long range, should the war take on that shape.

The volley broke the teeth of that charge. They flashed by and ran into the low hills, a third of a mile to the rear. . . . Again came the swoop of the enemy. Again the buffalo guns broke them and crumpled them up. . . . The huge roll down the third charge. There came the low, thick patter of the hoofs, and soon the rain of steel tipped arrows set in the building and fell harmless to the ground. . . . There were no more swoops, the Indians lost faith in the charge as a maneuver of war. They leaped off their ponies, most of them, and from the hills popped at the pale-faces, looking from those openings in the "Dobe Walls, with their rifles. For fourteen long, hot days the fight went on, now and then a charge, more often long range shooting, whereas the buffalo hunters excelled. When the fighting flagged the garrison played poker, leaving one to watch. When the cavalry came riding down from Dodge the beaten remnant of that war party went spluttering through the shallow reaches of the Canadian and headed south for the Staked Plains. Then the visiting Osages and Pawnees, pipe in hand and blankets wrapped about them, came beamingly from their audience hill to offer congratulations.

"The drink goes," returned Mr. Masterton, drawing up to Hanrahan's counter, which was again happily in its place. "The drink goes, but it ought to be for Inez. It was she who gave warning. If it hadn't been for Inez every man of us would have gone with Thurston and those eighty bucks might be riding yet. It was pretty work, Bob, to stand off five hundred Indians fourteen days and only lose one man, against their eighty. Here Inez came, mingling through the door, like a fine Indian on her skirts. She sneaked up to Mr. Masterton for a cigar. 'That's right,' said Mr. Masterton, putting her arctic neck. 'You're just in time. Let's have a drink to drink to the white man's medicine. Inez of 'Dobe Walls.'" had for her people, than her actions when the news of the Meeker massacre and the fighting that succeeded it reached Ouray at his home on the Uncompahgre, 20 miles from the agency. A strong appeal came to him to lead his people against the whites who had, as they thought, so cruelly wronged them. For a time it was feared that the old warrior might yield to the pleas, which his blood, his race and his kindred urged so powerfully, but his wife, Chipeta, called a savage, never wavered for a moment in her loyalty to what she thought was right, and from the very beginning she used all her influence for peace and insisted that Ouray should not listen, and should not lead his race against the white, even though the white man had threatened to put chains about their necks and imprison them for life, a punishment which to the Indian was worse than death. Chipeta knew that war meant murder, murder of hundreds of innocent whites and the extermination of her own race."

"Chipeta's real womanhood undoubtedly asserted itself in this instance. Her maternal instinct had taught her the cost of suffering which the birth of each new life makes upon the woman. She clearly saw at that time what many years later men all over the world discovered; that the wholesale slaughter of innocent lives is barbarism, a savage institution, the very mention of which should cause horror among civilized peoples."

"In General Adams' personal record of his rescue of the Meeker family," continued Mrs. Adams, "he says: 'Ouray told me afterward that during that night he suffered more agony of mind than ever before in his life; that something seemed to call him north to the home of his white river brothers, if only to stop the fighting, but that Chipeta wept and begged all night, saying that if he left, no one of the subchiefs would be able to control the young and wild element of the tribe. Her gentle counsel prevailed, and, by morning, Ouray had decided to order Douglas to retreat toward the Uncompahgre, an order silently and unwillingly obeyed. Had it been otherwise, our state would have been plunged into an interminable war as disastrous as was the Modoc war, as anyone familiar with the geographical formation of that country may see. Other Indians, incensed by long-continued wrongs, would have joined the Utes.'"

This sidelight upon the characters of Chipeta and her husband sheds new light upon the lives of Indians. It is in this day and age, rather difficult, to think of Indians otherwise than as savages, but surely no so-called civilized being ever showed the conservative, unselfish, merciful and even noble attitude which Ouray held in the time of this bitter trouble. No woman ever proved her duty to her people, her love of humanity, her understanding of life and of the possessors of life and her belief in the supreme justice of the great power over the world than did Chipeta in this crisis."

Nowadays one is inclined to class Indians simply as Indians, rather than distinguish between them. It was inevitable with this race of people as it is with any race in the world, that there should be the strong and the weak, that there should be the good and the bad, as we find them in every nationality. There were many noble Indians. Chipeta and Ouray are but two, though they are two of the finest and most notable. In "The Arrow Maker," a drama produced at the New Theater, New York city, last season, Mary Austin told a story of the life of an Indian woman. The purpose of the drama, according to the author, was to prove that humanity is everywhere, the fundamental speaking. The only differences being in external of custom, costume and manners. The study of Chipeta proves this."

Chipeta is an important figure in the history of Colorado. Mrs. Adams contends that Colorado owes her a debt of gratitude. Chipeta is now poor. She is said to be in actual want.

"It is a burning disgrace to this state," says Mrs. Adams, "a state so full of wealth and enterprise and of charitable souls. Ten years ago I made an appeal to the Federation of Women's clubs of this city for funds to make the last days of this old woman's life comfortable. The Colorado Springs Gazette gave me its columns to use. What was the result? Sixty dollars was sent me by a prominent man of this city and one dollar from a widow, who, when she gave the money, apologized for the meager sum she had to offer. I replied: 'Do you know what a dollar will buy Chipeta? It will get her a warm woolen hood, perhaps a shawl of some sort. Outside of this $61 and what I could add, I received nothing more. And yet this is a city of wealth and supposed charity.'"

"A great wrong has been done Chipeta, inasmuch as in the removal of the Utes to their present inhospitable home, there was no exception made in her case. She went with the rest of the tribe, although she begged to be allowed to remain on the land which had been given them, a perpetual home, and where she lived her happy life of peace and plenty with Ouray, where she had nursed and tended the restored captive women when they were brought to her house on their return from their terrible captivity, and they told me that they were most tenderly cared for by her."

"It is well known that the pension paid to the rescued women was taken from the annuities of the Utes in punishment for the great wrong they had committed, and here again was a great injustice done to this Indian woman. In the as in many other cases the innocent must suffer for the guilty, as only a small number of the tribe, misled by one or two turbulent spirits, were involved in this crime. The whole Ute nation has had to suffer because the people of Colorado, demanding their removal—this had to be."

Mrs. Meeker has a renewed pension, which, thanks to Mrs. John Anthony Wayne and other Colorado women, is not paid by the Utes, but by the government. I am glad that it is so and that provision has been made for this suffering and injured woman in her old age; but if she can be cared for, so also should Chipeta—the woman, who, though only an untutored Indian, led only by her own sense of right, did all she possibly could for Mrs. Meeker and her daughters and did so much to help General Adams in his daring enterprise. Chipeta is not able to work now. She has no one to work for her or to speak for her."

After having appealed to our senior senator some ten years ago, and to our representative in Congress at that time, for a portion of the million and a half dollars in Washington belonging to the Utes, and being told that they could not get an appropriation for her, if conceived the idea of appealing to the women of Colorado, the power behind the throne, with the result I have told you of. Now Chipeta is here. Everyone will have an opportunity of seeing this fine old woman and perhaps help will come to her even at this late date when she needs it more than ever."

Mrs. Adams' eloquent appeal for this Indian woman deserves an answer. It seems almost incredible that a woman who has done what Chipeta has done for the good of the state should be allowed to wait for the bare necessities of life at her age. Chipeta arrived in this city yesterday morning, tired out after her long journey. Buckskin Charley had his squaws pitch her tent. During the week she will entertain some old friends at dinner and will also be the guest at several functions to be given in her honor. This is probably the last time Chipeta will leave her reservation for she is old and traveling is hard for her. She is honored and respected among her own people, but in these days of Indian subjection, this does not aid her position nor relieve her wants."

CHIPETA AND THE DAUGHTER OF THE LATE GOVERNOR SENT OF COLORADO, IN INDIAN COSTUME.

BUTTERFLIES, emblematic of the gay round of festivities to which the city will be given over for this high carnival week, are everywhere in evidence. The graceful device will be skillfully introduced in the decorations of the buildings used during the carnival and blended with the costumes of the merry makers.

With a butterfly-like rapidity, the crowds will flit from one attraction to another, thronging the streets from early morning till long past midnight. All participating will unconsciously typify "sweet sixteen" rather than "forty" while celebrating the fortieth birthday anniversary of Colorado Springs.

This week, all roads lead toward Colorado Springs as it will be a season of homecoming to hundreds. Prominent pioneers, in particular, are taking an intense interest in the carnival and the joyous reunion of friends long separated will be a frequent and happy episode. Each day adds to the long list of those who will be here and the carnival has assumed proportions far exceeding the hopes of the originators.

Governor John F. Shaffroth, accompanied by Mrs. Shaffroth, will arrive in the city tonight and will remain throughout the carnival at the Antlers hotel. Adjutant General and Mrs. Chase will probably come at the same time. Reservations have been made at the hotels for the large numbers of society people and pioneers all over the state who are planning to attend the week's festivities, and in nearly every home guests are expected.

The Masque Ball.
Society, society not only of the city but the entire state, has set its stamp of approval upon the brilliant masque ball that has been planned as a brilliant attraction for carnival week. Every box has been spoken for and still there are demands that the committee are unable to satisfy and standing room will be at a premium Wednesday night at the Temple theater.

That rather baroque structure will be completely transformed with its wealth of gay decorations and myriads of lights and form an unequalled setting for the display of the beautiful costumes of the dancers and the full evening dress worn by the ladies viewing the jolly reign of King Carnival from the boxes.

Those who will entertain box parties are Mr. Glenville Moran, Mr. Frank Scott, Mr. H. Alexander Smith, Mr. George K. Shields, Mr. A. S. Littlefield, Mr. Ralph O. Giddings, Mr. James P. Shearer, Dr. Frederick A. Taylor, Mr. George E. Trippe, Dr. John LeRoy Hutchinson, Mr. Robert W. Chisholm, Mr. William S. Dunning, Mr. Eugene A. Sunderlin, Mr. R. W. Carlisle, Mr. Eugene P. Shove, Mr. Chaloner B. Schley, Mr. Jay B. Lippincott, Mr. Spencer Penrose, Mr. James McK. Ferriday, Mr. Victor W. Hungerford, Mr. George Barton, Mr. Edward A. Rosenfeld, Dr. William Whitridge Williams, Dr. Theodore F. DeWitt, Mr. J. Addison Hayes, Mr. Charles L. Tutt, Dr. Charles Fox Gardiner, Mr. Henry Hine, Mr. George Buell Russell.

Pioneer Reception.
At the reception of the pioneers, Tuesday evening, Mrs. William Wells Price, president of the El Paso County Pioneer association, will be ably assisted by the enthusiastic members in welcoming the pioneers. Mrs. Francis W. Goddard will represent the patriotic organizations and Colorado College, a pioneer institution, will be represented by President and Mrs. William Frederick Slocum. Those receiving have been assigned as follows:

West corridor.—Mr. F. L. Rouse, master of ceremonies; Mr. and Mrs. William Wells Price, Mrs. F. L. Rouse, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Eaton, Mr. and Mrs. E. S. R. Soly, Mr. and Mrs. Irving Howbert, Mr. Charles Adams, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Cotten, Dr. Boswell P. Anderson, Mr. W. Arthur Perkins, Mrs. Emily McFerran, Mrs. Matt France.

North corridor.—Mr. H. Hoyt Stevens, master of ceremonies; Mr. H. Hoyt Stevens, Mr. F. L. Rouse, Mr. and Mrs. James F. Barnes, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin W. Giddings, Mr. and Mrs. John Lennon, Mr. and Mrs. A. Armetrout, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar T. Ensign, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew J. Lawton, Mr. and Mrs. William F. Dixon, Mr. and Mrs. Frank G. Peck, Dr. and Mrs. William L. Bartlett, Mr. and Mrs. L. Everleth.

East corridor.—Mrs. Edgar Howbert, master of ceremonies; Mrs. Edgar Howbert, Mrs. Eugene E. Griswold, Miss Helen E. Griswold, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas T. Webb, Mr. and Mrs. Phil C. Hildreth, Mr. Willard N. Burgess, Mr. George Smith, Mr. Charles W. Howbert, Mr. Wakeman H. McIntyre, Mr. and Mrs. E. Nicholson, Mr. Edwin A. Sawyer.

South corridor.—Mr. Matthew Kennedy, master of ceremonies; Mrs. Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. William F. Slocum, Mr. and Mrs. John E. Lundstrom, Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Fyfe, Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Eldridge, Dr. and Mrs. James H. Sinclair, Mrs. Allen T. Gunnell, Mr. James E. McIntyre, Mr. and Mrs. Harry H. Seldomridge, Major and Mrs. Henry McAllister, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Fisher, Mrs. Joshua Sumner, Mr. Lawson Sumner.

Those invited to preside at the luncheon are as follows: Room 8 to 9 o'clock, Mrs. Henry McAllister and Mrs. Nathan Wilson. Room 9 to 10 o'clock, Mrs. Gilbert McGraw and Mrs. Phil C. Hildreth. To sunset, Miss May Hubbard, Miss Matilda McAllister, Mrs. Harry Lee, Mrs. Charles W.

Howbert, Mrs. Willard N. Burgess, Mrs. Clarence Clark Hamlin, Mrs. George Smith, Miss Frances Rouse, Miss Violet Eaton, Miss Florence Stevens, Miss Evelyn Lennox, Mrs. George Powell, Mrs. Frank H. Riddle, Miss Alice Perkins.

Among those who have signified their intention of being present for the pioneer parade and reception are the following residents of Denver, formerly of Colorado Springs:

Mr. and Mrs. Channing Sweet, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Sweet, Dr. and Mrs. F. H. Sutherland, Mr. and Mrs. A. V. Hunter, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Howbert, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. McIntyre, Mr. and Mrs. Russell Gates, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Macomber, Mr. and Mrs. James Correy, Major and Mrs. J. C. Helm, Mr. and Mrs. John Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Tuttle, Mr. and Mrs. D. K. Lee, Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Mark, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Whittle, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Rayer, Mr. and Mrs. Myron W. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Howell, Mrs. J. B. Bacon, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Drinkwater, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Trupe, Mr. and Mrs. George Stidger, Mrs. Dr. Strickler, Mrs. Walter A.

it is not possible to give an adequate forecast of the terpsichorean treat and curiosity is rife with the hundreds who will be in attendance.

FAR away in a mossy, secluded glen of the mountains, where the sunlight wavers fitfully between pine and fir and silvery aspen branches, a tiny stream twinkles between cool gray rocks and moss-grown, wet banks, and broad leaved water plants strive to hide beneath the dank, moist leaves, its silvery tinkle. Wild rose bushes, and rank ferns, and sweet white star-flowers grow everywhere in a wilderness of wild beauty.

Where the glen is dark with shade and moist and cool, great clusters of fragrant columbine, purple as dawn-mists, and gold as the sun, blossom in the sun-flecked silence; butterflies, white and gold and palest lavender, flit from flower to flower, and sip from the twinkling stream. Song birds thrill the echoing hills with their sweet melodies, and soft winds, fragrant with the breath of wild flowers, stir the silence of the sunlit glade where fragile columbines blossom in a wilderness of wavering purple and gold.

Dern's Coffee Mill

Freshly Roasted Coffee

Black coffee

The superiority of French coffee is often attributed to the skill of the chef.

While the roasting of coffee is important the manner of roasting the coffee is all important. Careful attention to detail has made French cooking famous. They have found that unless the oil in the coffee bean is fully developed by roasting the flavor is lost.

Our slow roasting brings out the best in coffee.

One trial will convince you of its superior flavor.

Being freshly roasted it makes ten cups more to the pound.

HOW TO ROUND OUT HOLLOW.

Instead of giving a good share of your time and money for massages and costly massage cream, try the following simple but very effective home treatment. Make a strip with a cup and a half sugar and a pint of water. Then into this stir an ounce of gallic acid and take a tablespoonful before meals. Reports from institutions where gallic acid is used indicate that it is wonderful in its action, the principle of which is to nourish underfed or stunted humors and to energize them. It will respond quickly. What this is done hollows round out and it does not come from the skin, but from the true proportions and beauty of the body. Any druggist can supply gallic acid, but if preferred send stamp for box and I will give the name and address of a chemist who makes a pure gallic acid and who will mail it in a day wrap post.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES.

Janet. A delightful soothing and refreshing shampoo can be had with little effort or expense. If you get an original package of egg and dissolve one teaspoonful in a cup hot water. Pour a little of this at a time on the head and rub briskly and the creamy penetrating lather will always irritate and neutralize excess. It dissolves all dirt and dandruff. It makes the hair and scalp healthy, clean while the hair dries quickly and takes on a pleasing silky lustre and softness. Your druggist will sell you enough egg for a quart to make a dozen shampoos.

Edwin. Carelessness of a complexion during the heated term invariably ruins the soft texture and velvet smoothness of the skin as well as causing tan and freckles. A splendid cream with which to massage the skin is made by dissolving 18 ounces of impurities for the hair and scalp. It is thick and smooth and when cool massage freely into the skin using a light rotary movement. This cream cleanses the skin of impurities, dispels fine lines and crows feet and rounds out hollows. It is especially good to use as a protection against the sun's rays and to guard against freckles and tan.

Mrs. A. M. You can wear low neck and short sleeves after applying a delicate paste to the hairy surface. Get an original package of deodor from your druggist and with water make sufficient paste to cover the hairy parts, then apply and in two or three minutes scrape off and the hairs will have disappeared, and after the skin is washed it is left white and firm. You must be careful however to get genuine deodor as substitutes frequently cost as much but are worthless.

Alma M. If your dull stringy hair can be given a natural high gloss and fluffiness if you make up and use this. Pour a half-pint alcohol into a half pint water, then add one ounce bala cantol. Carefully massaging the scalp with this tonic allows irritation, soothes and cools the scalp and induces a luxuriant growth of silky, fluffy hair and for all time banishes dandruff or excessive oiliness.

Belle. Hous. Only and sallow skins can be made smooth, clear and healthy if powder is discarded and this simple retreating lotion used. Dissolve two ounces of amaro in a pint hot water and when cool it is ready. Apply freely after rinsing the face a accumulation of grime from the skin. The faithful use of this amaro retreating lotion will give you a complexion of rare beauty and expert chemists outwitting any make kind.

E. T. The languid "all-gone" feeling and muddled complexion plainly indicate a serious condition which undoubtedly may cause illness. This state is the outcome of a blood-inclusion system and calls for a purifier and tonic. For a small outlay you can prepare a splendid blood purifier and body-builder by making a pint of heavy syrup, into which is then dissolved one ounce sarsone the dose of which is two teaspoonsful before meals. Using this soon rids the system of impurities, complete health and full strength.

ALL THE LIVE, UP-TO-DATE SPORTING NEWS IS TOLD

WANT ST. PETERS SERIES OF 300 SAMUEL HEAVYWEIGHTS

A FAVORITE WITH CHICAGO BUGS

W. E. SIX. ACCEVED A STAR

THEY WERE A NEW EASYMAN

By W. W. NAUGHTON.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 29.—If the scheme Hugh D. McIntosh has in view was not the way the promoter expects, Australia will be the scene of all the heavy-weight fights next summer, which, by the way, will be next winter in these latitudes.

McIntosh has his lines out for every heavyweight that is supposed to be worth his salt, either as a fighter or an attraction.

The lure McIntosh is using is that he wishes to arrange an elimination tourney for the purpose of developing an opponent for Jack Johnson. Needless to say, he intimates that Johnson will be on hand ready to risk his title with the survivor of the tourney.

Sam Langford has been asked to visit Australia and so has Sam McVey. So has Al Kaufman and so has Jim Flynn. If Carl Morris has received no invitation as yet, he need not begin to sulk. He will surely be asked to participate in the grand free-for-all.

Out in Australia at present there are comparatively few heavyweights, but that will not matter as much if all the Americans who have received offers from McIntosh make the trip. The visitors will be strong enough Americans to make the tourney an imposing affair.

There are some heavyweights there, of course. Bill Lang, the champion of the British empire, is in Australia, and so is Jack Lester, who seems to sniff the elimination trouble from afar and is prolonging his exile so as to be in on the big dolours. Then they have one Bill Turner, a Tasmanian, who is thought to be a fellow of infinite promise.

Dick Arnest, the world's rowing champion, has had a boxing bee in his hip, but for quite a while. Dick was first a cycling champion and then he made up his mind to become an catsman. By wonderful determination he mastered the river pastime and won the premiership. He has an idea that if he tackles boxing he would meet with similar success, and it may be, if the McIntosh venture thrives. Dick will decide to become a championship candidate.

In such case the Australian representative would be Lang, Turner and Arnest, the American, Lester, Kaufman, Flynn, Langford, McVey and possibly Morris.

Jack Johnson, who is always an uncertain quantity and who contradicts himself nearly every day, is saying now that he has not decided to fight for McIntosh in Australia. Probably if Langford had not been invited, Johnson would have jumped at the chance. In any case if, as rumor has it, Johnson will have to fight before long in order to replenish his cashbox, he will be compelled to follow the bunch out yonder. There will be nobody left north of the equator for him to box.

Australia is ripe for a big slugfest of the kind described. Times are good out yonder and money is plentiful. Boxing, which is always a staple sport there, is more popular than ever at present. The Rushcutters Bay stadium on the outskirts of Sydney would of course be the scene of the elimination contests and the championship match which would bring the Queensbury carnival to a conclusion. The tourney would probably string along through the summer and autumn and have its culmination about Easter Monday next.

Now there is many a slip, and the McIntosh scheme may not go through. A good deal depends on the terms he offers the Americans for their preliminary fights. There isn't a man amongst them, with the possible exception of Langford, who would consider the prospect of a match with Johnson sufficient inducement to undertake the journey.

McIntosh, by the way, seems to think that Bill Lang will win the tourney and earn the right to oppose Johnson in the final. The wish, probably, is farther to the thought. If Lang was successful through all these contestants, the Lang-Johnson affair would be a bigger card than the Johnson-Burns fight of a few years ago.

If, on the other hand, the cutting of the pugilistic cards resulted in the pairing of Sam Langford and Jack Johnson for the championship tilt, the outlook for financial gain would not be so rosy. The "white Australian" spirit, which pervades that country as at present, would probably cause a shrinkage in the receipts if the two colored heavyweights were sent together at the close of the tourney.

Just what Jack Johnson intends doing is a good deal of a conundrum. Nothing much has been heard recently of his match with Petty Officer Curran. This was to have taken place at the football grounds in Dublin and was to have been managed by Flanagan, who acted as Johnson's officer toward the close of the training days at Reno.

PHILADELPHIA, July 29.—"Bob" Burman, in an exhibition mile with his Blitzen Benz, today lowered the Point Breeze track record of 59.25 seconds by making the circuit in 58.45. The record was held by Barney Oldfield. Burman's performance was the feature of the Quaker City Motor club's races at this track.

There was an ugly snail in the 30-mile handicap, in which four cars were mixed up. Harry Baker, while driving a Metz at high speed struck an Opel car. A second later a Kline car plowed into the Metz and the Opel, and then another Kline car plowed into the wreck.

Charles Winkler of this city, mechanic for Baker, was thrown out and ran over by one of the Kline cars. At the hospital it was found that his collar-bone had been broken and that he had sustained severe internal injuries.

FLINTROCK WINS HANDICAP
BUFFALO, July 29.—The rich Dominion handicap at Fort Erie this afternoon was won by Flintrock in a romp by three lengths from Ocean Bound. He ran the mile and a quarter in 2:04.4.

NEW YORK, July 29.—Johnny Hayes, the hero of the 1908 Olympic games, and Pietro Dorando, the Italian Marathon runner, who gave the Irish-American crack such a great battle for first place in the 1908 classic, will again be seen in action within a few months on the outdoor cinder path.

For the past few months these two old rivals have been touring the old world, together in an attempt to get some promoter to match them up for a race over the full Marathon distance. The European promoters would have nothing to do with these star long-distance plodders, as they would not run unless they received $1,000 for their efforts. This the European promoters considered to be an exorbitant price.

During the past year Hayes and Dorando have been in great form and is confident of defeating the Italian wonder, when they meet. Johnny appears to be in better condition than he has been in since he breasted the tape a winner in the last Olympic games.

When he left this country Dorando was in pretty poor condition. This was caused by overwork. But now he has had a long rest Dorando feels lower feel sure that he will again display that form which enabled him to defeat the best Marathon runners when he first came to this country.

When Dorando and Hayes arrive on these shores it is probable that Billy Quail will challenge both of them. Quail is considered by many the best long-distance runner in the world. Besides being able to defeat the best of them over the full Marathon distance Quail has proved himself again that he is also in a class by himself in racing from 10 to 15 miles.

Relie Zeider, the hustling youngster of the Chicago White Sox, who has made a hit with the fans as a first baseman after having proved a dismal failure as a second-sacker. Zeider's old job, the one he had held down for years, was at second base and, strange to say, he proved a joke at that station as a big leaguer and has been doing wonderfully well since he was switched to the initial cushion in an emergency. Zeider is a blitzer of the first caliber as well as a brilliant fielding first baseman.

Secker's Sensational Game and Wins Western Title

DETROIT, Mich., July 29.—Albert Secker of the Riverside club, Chicago, today defeated Robert A. Gardner of the same club 8 up and 7 to play, in the final match of 36 holes for the amateur golf championship of the west.

Secker's victory came after four years of unsuccessful attempts—and he made it his climax to one of the most sensational exhibitions of golf witnessed in the history of the western association.

After the championship was won, Secker and Gardner played out the match and the former tied the course record of 71. Yesterday he turned in a 68, but this record will not be regarded as official account of the concession of several short putts.

Not a stroke was conceded the new champion this afternoon. Secker had a fine chance to break the course record, but he missed a 10-foot putt on the last green, and was forced to take five for a 71. The afternoon card:

Secker—out—4, 5, 4, 4, 5, 4, 4, 3, 3—35.
In—2, 4, 3, 4, 5, 4, 3, 4, 5—37.

In—4, 5, 2, 5, 5, 5, 4, 4, 3—37.

In a four-ball foursome match at the Colorado Springs Golf club yesterday afternoon the team representing that club defeated the Cheyenne Mountain Country club 3 to 4. The four-ball match was arranged as a change from the regular team matches that have been played during the summer. Scores

A special professional match between W. W. Campbell, of the Golf club, and G. A. Brooks, of the Country club, 18 holes, was won by Campbell 5 up and 3 to play. At the ninth hole Campbell was 1 up, but in the last half of the match he played in top form and had little trouble in winning the match.

In addition to the team match there were scores of other golfers out yesterday. The course is fast rounding into shape and the best in the state and west of the game are out in large numbers every day.

ENGLISH CRICKETERS WIN
WOOLWICH, Eng., July 29.—The cricket team, representing the Royal Artillery college of this city, today defeated the players of the German town, Pa., Cricket club, who are making a tour of England, by 45 runs.

By MONTY.

NEW YORK, July 29.—During my recent "sawing around the circuit" of the American league, I saw many things that were of interest, but one of the most striking was the way the new recruits of the White Sox looked. It is amazing how this fellow Duffy picks up top-notch youngsters. Chicago is so thrused over the newcomers, who have been delivering a high grade of ball that has kept the team from fighting with the cellar candidate.

While much has been said about the prowess of Ping Bodie, the sensational young outfielder from the Pacific coast, the prowess of Rolie Zeider has been left unmentioned. And, if the performance of one brief week can be counted as any criterion, this youth is destined to become one of the greatest fielding first basemen in the game.

Tall and light in build, he is as wiry as a cat and seems to have the makings of a star of the first Chase type. He is out up along the lines of the New Yorker and has the same nervous, anxious manner of doing things, seeming to want them to happen before they do.

For weeks Zeider was in bad with the fans, who made regular journeys to the South Side park. He was booed and jeered until Duffy had to bank him out of the lineup. He was called a bophead, a wagon and numerous other unpleasant epithets. Thereafter, however, the time a big crowd of fans like countenance adorning the players' bench.

But one day Honorable Hughes saw fit to shove the youngster in at first base. A hot crowd, and Duffy at tight and Zeider played the game he was a hot one came his way and he turned an impossible unassisted play. Bingo another, then a third.

The thing was repeated for four in the next season. Zeider turned inside out to stop a wild throw from one of his teammates across the diamond, and he beat the runner by a slide to first. That day Zeider made good. He is still making good.

Result: He is now cheered lustily by the White Sox fans every time that he steps to the plate.

Zeider isn't it that a man who was thought as a second baseman and shot out should win his way into the affections of the fans by his play at a position absolutely foreign to him? But that is what Zeider did, and you can't find a White Sox fan who won't tell you that Zeider has played a remarkable fielding game ever since he was transferred to the first base.

Zeider has pulled some remarkable stuff at the initial cushion. He has scooped low throws after low throws and has saved many an error for the infielders by his clever work. Nor is Zeider a weak when it comes to taking into the base. As a further proof, ground balls he is good and covers a good territory in going after fouls.

Just another of these strange freaks of the game.

Here is a man who failed to make good with the fans in his own position and becomes a hit when he is sent to cover territory with which he was not familiar.

NEW YORK, July 29.—Dispatches from Russia state that Zhyssok, the big Polish wrestler, who will be on hand to challenge the winner of the Gotch-Hackenschmidt match on Labor day, is doing lots of hard work on the mat. He has been wrestling in Warsaw, Moscow and other Russian cities, and is to finish up in London after visiting Brussels and Paris.

At Warsaw he defeated Anton LeBarre, a Frenchman, in 27 minutes. Nearly 11,000 persons paid to see the match, and the gate receipts were over $10,000.

Manager Jack Herman, who is with Zhyssok, writes home to say that he has come across a great many big men in Russia, several weighing 300 pounds, and that some of these fellows will make the champion hustle in a year's time. Zhyssok will arrive in America about November 10.

Hackenschmidt is training hard on the other side for his next meeting with Gotch.

Gotch has already commenced preparing for his match. He is working out his home at Humboldt, Iowa. He now weighs 214 pounds, and hopes to easily get off 10 pounds. The big farmer is doing about 14 miles of road work every morning, and in the afternoon finishes off with a light walk. The only foreigner in his camp is Yusoff Hassan, the young Turk, who stayed last night and 15 minutes with Hackenschmidt before being thrown last winter, and who received a broken shoulder in a friendly bout with Gotch last Thursday.

Lorch's Ball Team to Play Athletics
Theodore Lorch's own playlet, "Lost in the Fifth," is scheduled for presentation at the Zoo ball yard Tuesday afternoon, when his team of actor persons engages the Wahsatch Athletics in deadly combat. Mr. Lorch has appeared in many roles, and his portrayal as a first-baser is said to be one of the best things he does. Other members of the Lorch company will make up the Lorch Tiger team. The proceeds of the game goes to the Associated Charities. Play starts at 2 o'clock, with the cast distributed as follows:

Black Sox to Play BOULDER BLUES TODAY
Black Sox against the Boulder Blues is the sport attraction at Roswell park this afternoon, beginning at 3 o'clock. The Boulder squad claims the championship of northern Colorado while the Sox are the colored champions of the southern division of the state, having lost but three games this season. Much rivalry exists between the teams and a hard game is expected today.

The park has been improved and both teams are out to win. Miscellaneous Blossom declares that the Black Sox must take today's game and promises the visitors a warm reception on their first visit here.

 NEW YORK, July 29.—Al Kaufman, who hasn't sold any more than Napoleon has for the past two months, has broken out.
 Jim Flynn was the boy who put the silence on Al, and for a time he thought he'd never stir, but he's going again, boys. He has an offer from Much McIntosh to box either Jack Lester or Bill Lang in Australia and will get $5,000 along with his expenses for mingling.

Kaufman has been quite sick since his defeat, and only last week showed signs of bounding to. Al expects to leave for the Antipodes about the 10th of August.

There are no early wolves in Australia, according to McFlynn's history. One mustn't meander around under the name of Jack Lester is half of the present beast population. Bill Lang, the other dinosaur, is still poking his nose about. Al has these two to contend with—just those and that's all. The trimmed Lang in Philadelphia in six rounds, and although he has no signs of being a contender, he has no signs of being a contender, he has no signs of being a contender.

BOSTON, July 29.—When Horace Greely was dialing out the words for young men about going west, he wasn't thinking about the national pastime. If any one will prove that he was, we will immediately charge Mr. Greeley with an error, which will, of course, bring down his average.

As we said, the diamond sport never entered the honorable bean of Mr. Greeley. He "go west" stuff runs for the end book for the baseball scouts.

When a gumshoe man starts out from a ball club looking for players, he doesn't rush west as Mr. Greeley advised, but instead he makes tracks for the nearest depot and does a Pullman ride to the south.

Why the south? That's easy. For the very good reason that more stars have come from the south in the last few years than from any other part of the country.

Almost every team has a southerner on its payroll, and in the springtime, when every team is winning pennants, in the stories shipped back by the overzealous scribes who are sent with the teams, the fans have to put up with a lot of junk about John Jones and "his southern drawl" or Jim Smith, "this fiery young southerner."

It's pretty hard to single out a team in either one of the two big leagues which hasn't a southerner in its lineup. The Boston Braves have one in Jack Spratt, who has all that "southern drawl" we read about. Jack comes from down in Virginia. Buck Herzog lives down below the hog and hominy.

Ever since Barney Dreyfuss, owner of the Pittsburgh Pirates, upset all baseball precedents by paying $25,000 in cash and players for Marjory O'Toole, St. Paul's spitball pitcher, and has offered $10,000 for Kelly, O'Toole's catcher, fans have been wondering where this remarkable battery really comes from.

Any time that a battery attracts as much attention as O'Toole and Kelly, the pitcher has and what the catcher does are worth recording. O'Toole is strictly a spitball pitcher, meaning that if he were suddenly bereft of saliva he would be left with his glove and a prayer. The St. Paul star is big and rangy and they say is somewhere in Massachusetts. The pitcher is touted as another Ed Walsh, and that's largely why Dreyfuss fell over himself and paid the limit price for a player in the history of baseball. He didn't look like $25,000 in the spring of 1910 when he was with Cincinnati, and was turned over to St. Louis in the Western. He went from there to St. Paul. In 1910 he won 19 games and lost five, struck out 201, made 37 assists and contributed one error. He averaged a little better than six strikeouts per game.

From the reports of half a dozen gumshoe men scouting for the big leagues, Kelly looks good. He is hitting well above the 300 mark, and slugging catches are none too plentiful. Kelly led the association last year in stolen bases and possesses a great arm. Brenahan, who was in with a big bid for the O'Toole and Kelly persons, owned the catcher. That was two years ago. He had plenty of men on the team and picked Kelly as one of the men who would have to go. The catcher went and St. Louis received $750 for him. Now Kelly is one-half a battery that the Pirates consider a good buy at $25,000.

One hundred and thirty-five pastimers in five games. That's the record for chances in the roster that Connie Mack and Hal Chase made in the recent quintet of battles between the Athletics and Yankees, and it's no exaggeration to say that this is pretty close to a season's record. It makes an average of 27 men to each fracas, and three nines to a game is going good. Thirty-two players were used in one game and in another the names of 31 athletes were inscribed on the roll of the day's doings. This record was due largely to the excessive heat that prevailed during the Philadelphia-New York series.

The failure of a big majority of young players tried out in the fast baseball set to make good, and the rapid decline of a number of veterans has caused a wild scramble in the major league clubs to gather in talent for immediate use. Considering the fact that the country was secured with champions last year and that it was not thought anyone was overlooked, it is not surprising that so few of the younger players have made good. The fault is not entirely with the players, but rests largely with the club owners. A desire to strengthen their teams speedily has caused some managers to cast off players who might make good in fast company. With a little seasoning, but the club owners cannot wait for the buds to bloom. They want the promising baseball plants to flower with hothouse speed.

Jockey Johnny Walsh stands to lose his $5,000 wager made with a New York sport that he could walk from Detroit to San Francisco in 65 days. Walsh is still in St. Francis hospital here with his right leg in such shape that he has to hobble around on crutches. The little jockey was five days ahead of his schedule when he reached here, but the extra time has been eaten up. Today Walsh should be about 100 miles west of Laramie. He said last night that his race against time was practically as good as lost. He has some consolation, however, in the fact that he will receive $500 for beating Weston's time into Denver.

There Ain't No Rules in Courtship

By KENNETH HARRIS.

Washington Hancock Proves It by the Story of Jase Pickett's Strange Experience.

"Here's a advertisement of a book that tells you how to do your courtin'," observed Solomon Baker, looking up from the weekly paper. "You ought to get that, Jim."

"The tall youth, dangling his legs from the counter on the dry goods side, allowed that he could write a book about that himself, if he'd a mind to; but he blushed, nevertheless."

"Jim's got sense," remarked Washington Hancock, when the last had gone around the circle. "Jim knows what a right smart of young fellows ain't no idea of; that courtin's a game where there ain't no rules. It's ketchin' as-ketch-can, in courtin', no holds barred. Anyway, a fellow wants to know who done wrote the book."

"That reminds me of Jase Pickett. Jase was workin' for Abe Peederberry one summer an' he took a shine to Abe's daughter, Clarissy, but he didn't just exactly know how to let her know about it, so he fluently went to an' ol' back, name of Pete Higginson. Pete was a kind of a shuffler of 'em, didn't lose no an' he didn't ever, didn't do no more'n he had to an' the rest of the time he was readin' paper-back novels."

"One of the bestest ways is to let on that you don't care a continental cent about her, one way 'nuther," says Pete. "How'll I do that?" Jase asks him.

"Don't have nothin' to say to her, more'n bein' polite," says Pete. "I don't," says Jase. "I ain't got the gall to."

"Keep out of her way," Pete tells him.

"I ain't no chance to," says Jase. "She keeps out of my way."

"Pete pulls his whiskers an' strokes his bald head sorter studfin'. 'Sposed you put on your good clothes an' go see some other gal, he says, finally."

"Oh, Shucks!" says Jase.

"Shucks! I don't know no other gal," says Jase, "an' if I did," he says, "I wouldn't know what to say to her no more'n I do to Clarissy."

"Gimme a chaw of tobacco," says Pete.

"Jas hands out his plug an' Pete bites off the big end an' studies a while longer."

"It ain't hard," he says finally. "All you've got to do is to talk about things in glum with a soupcon of nry bandage."

"A what?" says Jase.

"I allowed, you'd know what that was," says Pete, "but if you don't there ain't much use explainin' to you. There was a fellow down in Lady Edlin's boudoir an' he made a right smart of a hit, that's all. You might serenade her."

"I ain't no quartette," says Jase.

"You don't have to be, you coud' sing Pete. 'Get you a guitar an' sing madrigal under her casement window, by yoursef'. If you can't play a guitar, play suthin' else."

"Only thing I kin play is a Jew-harp," says Jase, "an' I never knowed anybody 'at could play that an' sing at the same time. I coud' sing, now, an' if I did raise any racket, Abe 'ud turn loose on me with his shotgun. What's more, I done busted my Jew-harp an' sence that goshendin' out, I kicked out my two front teeth, I doubt if I could make her buzz if she wasn't busted."

"I'd like right well to help you out if I could, Jase," says Pete. "Can't you think up no other scheme?" asks Jase.

"A mighty good way is to get into a peck of trouble," Pete allows. "I might have thought of that afore, but some how it slipped me. If you could lose ever' cent you had in the world an' go to her an' tell her that you are a beggar."

"I ain't got but eight dollars an' sixty-three cents besides what's a-comin' to me from Abe," says Jase. "I don't believe that's enough to cut any figger with her, an' I allowed I'd buy a couple of Edmund Walker's shoats with them eight dollars. Pap, he's got swill that's a-runnin' to waste right now, an' how'n I a-goin' to get me a start if I lose it? What's more, I coudn't lose it. It's in the savin's bank an' I've got to give sixty days notice afore I kin draw a cent, or else forfeit the intrust on it, which 'ud be a sinful waste, an' the best they give is only three per cent."

"He Wasn't No Post Neither."

"I reckon that wouldn't do then," says Pete. "I sposed you coudn't write no poetry?"

"No, no," says Jase.

"Ought to be able to do suthin' that 'ud make her feel right sorry for you," says Pete. "Pity is close kin to love, as the feller says. Well, how'd it be for you to get into a fuss with Abe an' have him kick you out an' swear he'll shoot the liver out of you if you darken his door agin'?"

"Girls is 'most always contrary an' that might do the business with Clarissy."

"It 'us terrible easy to get Abe started, but it's hard to make him quit," Jase objects. "He'd be as apt to bite off my ear as not, or lay me out with a necktie if he got worked up."

"Some fellers can hit a man a lick or two when they feel like it an' then stop 'bout makin' bawds of theyselves, but that ain't Abe," says Pete.

"If you had a dark, mysterious past," says Pete.

"Born an' raised right here in Hoopole township," says Jase.

"You'd jump out an' dissipate to beat the cars," Pete suggested. "Drink an' gamble an' raise partier Ned. Get a reckless gleam in your eyes or—say, there's three cases of typhus in Frog Holler. Go out an' ketch you a case an' let Clarissy nurse you back to life an' stretch with the cool touch of her hand on your fevered brow. That's a winner ever' time. (Once a gal gently pushes back the masses of dark hair that stray down on a feller's pallid forehead it's a four-ace bet.)"

"Oh, shucks!" says Jase.

"How it all ended."

"Then go hang yoursef'," says Pete walkin' off. "Maybe she'll tell the fust blouses of Spring to the grassy mound that kivers all she loved best on air. Trouble is, you don't want to follow no advice."

Hancock concluded with a chuckle. "What did Jase do?" asked the boy on the counter, with interest.

"He went back an' sat Clarissy if she didn't want to marry him," Hancock replied, "an' Clarissy, she allowed she didn't keer if she did."

SOUR GRAPES

From the New York Herald.

BERLIN.—England is indignant because a rich country could not raise enough money to prevent the sale of Rembrandt's "Mill" to America, and now Professor von Seidlitz of Dresden tries to prove that the picture, for which $500,000 was paid, is not by Rembrandt's hand. He declares that the question of its author cannot be answered decidedly, but that its warm transparent coloring and the technical treatment of its numerous figures would agree with the work of Rembrandt's pupil, Aert de Gelder.

Dr. Wilhelm Bode, general director of the Berlin royal museum, and an authority in Rembrandt investigations, thinks the genuineness of "The Mill" is far above all doubt.

"It indisputably is a first-class Rembrandt," Dr. Bode stated. "The picture before its journey across the Atlantic had been in Berlin, where it was thoroughly cleaned by Professor Haugner. Then I studied it closely again," said Dr. Bode, "and the beauties of the picture never came more overpoweringly to the light than now, after the successful cleaning. With the work of Aert de Gelder, 'The Mill' has nothing in common."

"It is a masterpiece of the Dutch school," said Dr. Bode, "and the beauties of the picture never came more overpoweringly to the light than now, after the successful cleaning. With the work of Aert de Gelder, 'The Mill' has nothing in common."

The Heart of India.

By WM. G. FRIZELL.

A TRAIN of cool, comfortable cars had been built specially for our trip across India. They were equipped with electric lights and fans and had ice coolers and private baths in each compartment. We enjoy a comfort and luxuries about their mosques and tombs in gala attire. Joseph, with his coat of many colors, was outdoors. These gorgeous decorations and multicolored garments furnished a continuous moving picture show. No two people in this motley crowd were clad alike. How so many

Up—arriving we found comfortable accommodations at a hotel operated by a multimillionaire, who runs the big hotels in the interior of India. Naturally the Taj was the first thing we saw in Agra and also the last. The Mohammedans have left upon India an impression that coming ages will not efface. At Agra their art, genius and devotion are crystallized in palaces and mosques.

Darjeeling is one of the many hill stations of India, a refuge from heat and plague. This scenic route affords a quick information from the summer heat of the plains to the light, cool air of the mountains; from despondent, languid, melancholy natives to bright, cheerful, hardy mountaineers. The jungles we went through were infested with wild beasts of every description. A wolf tale was told of former days of terror when passing trains were delayed to give packs of elephants an opportunity to cross the track. We ourselves must have seen at least fifty elephants with their riders.

only to look upon the highest peaks of the Himalayas in this region. Mount Everest is the highest peak in the world and it was our ambition to see it by sunrise, a privilege which is granted to few. After a light chota haree we started, some on ponies and some in dandies, for Tiger Hill, a six mile ride. As daylight broke nothing could be seen on the way but immense seas of floating clouds in the valleys below. Those who have seen the summit of Everest, towering 29,000 feet in the heavens, say it is a picture never to be forgotten.

Benares is India. Its bad odors are sacred. It has more idols than inhabitants. Upon our arrival at Benares we were entertained by the warda, who did marvelous things in a wonderful way with but little and unostentatious paraphernalia. The time passed quickly. Pilgrims were everywhere. From afar the crippled and aged had come to die and the able-bodied to take home some of the sacred water of the Ganges. The ghats should be visited in the known even in an American Pullman.

It was half past 5 on a hot morning when our train pulled into a large station at Delhi, but somehow nature favored us with an exceptionally cool breeze. Delhi was hot, but not as it had been pictured nor as we had imagined. Cool, refreshing drinks were always available. Punkahs were also near at hand. A barefoot servant stood by to bring water for a cool bath in an improvised tub. The heated hours were few and the nights more comfortable than one finds in midsummer in some American cities.

A religious festival had called forth the wearing of rich and costly apparel. It seemed that every native from the old imperial city had gathered on the highways to participate. It was a Hindu day, but the Mohammedans welcomed it as well and welcomed could crowd themselves into so small a space we could not understand.

Situated in the center of a plain and equally distant from Bombay and Calcutta is the splendid city of Agra. Mogul fame might well be called the diamond setting in Britain's oriental crown. There is little of interest en route to Agra from which ever direction one approached it, but to have such a vision of splendor as that of the Taj-Mahal break upon one is worth many days of travel.

When first this palace came in sight its dome seemed to our critical eye of all proportion to the rest of the building, but it was because the shrubbery hid from view the elevated platform on which it stands. A nearer view showed it to be faultless in proportion as well as in line—the nearest approach to perfection that man has ever accomplished.

Elephants, tigers and rhinoceroses are very numerous in these jungles, and the natives live in constant fear of the men safari, which frequently attack them. The pythons, too, are a constant menace to the villagers. The elephants of these jungles are well protected by law.

This narrow two foot gauge road, winding around the hills, gradually makes the ascent of 7,000 feet. It is one of the most picturesque in the world. One minute we were whizzing through the air, and the next we were suspended between precipices.

We found in Darjeeling a varied native life. Here is a variety of tribes wearing the effects with rings, beads and charms for sale. They keep in constant motion their prayer wheels, which they are willing to part with for a couple of rupees.

Many travelers visit Darjeeling if early morning to see the bathing and late in the afternoon to see the burning. We engaged an open top boat supplied with comfortable chairs and rowed by several natives. Crowding the ghats were men and women of all ages. Old, helpless women were being led to the water to bathe. It is a scientific fact that this Ganges water has antiseptic qualities. It will purify the Hindu even after he has come in contact with a Christian.

When we finished Renares we left for more attractive locations and more pleasant associations. We were glad that we went and glad that we left.

Our party after making the trip through the heart of India rejoined the Cleveland and were heartily welcomed by our fellow tourists. The great ship was a very welcome sight, and we enjoyed once more the comforts of home on the other side of the globe.

At the same time it is true that Tennessee and Tennessee have a far wider audience through the printed page than ever Homer gained at the mouths of minstrels, and that many who enjoy reading Shakespeare's pages for themselves today care little to see him staged.

MISS DUMONT'S SISTER

BY EVELYN VAN BUREN

YOU ought to have three rows of ribbon, three different widths, around the bottom of the skirt," Miss Dumont said, glancing up from her sewing.

"But ribbon's so expensive, Katie," Miss Dumont's sister looked at her husband, whose eyes raised inquisitively over the top of his evening paper. "Three rows'd be nice," she admitted, "but I can make one do."

"Would three rows be the thing, Katie, I mean New Yorkie and up-to-date?" Miss Dumont's sister's husband put down his paper and gave his attention fully to the subject.

"It would be quite the thing," Miss Dumont said. "Wouldn't you both just as soon call me Kathleen as Katie?"

"Why sure; why not? There's some class to the name you've picked out. Katie Riley was all right back there in Jacksonville, but in New York—and you look just like your new name sounds too. You know what I mean; grand, kind of." Miss Dumont's brother-in-law sat back in his chair, thoughtfully snapping a fat finger and thumb. "Now take my name. George Hicks hasn't any tone."

Little Mrs. Hicks looked at her husband. "It's an all right name, George-boy. It suits little Mub."

"You get the three rows of ribbon for that skirt, like Katie like Kathleen says," Mr. Hicks rose and fumbled in his pockets. "And you'd better get on to the New York styles all you can, now we're here."

He handed Mrs. Hicks a bill and moved to the door.

"Where you going, Georgie?" asked Mrs. Hicks anxiously.

"I'll go up to our room," he answered, "and write a letter to the firm; then I'll go out to the corner and post it."

"Need me to help you write it?" Mrs. Hicks looked sweetly up at her husband.

"No," he said, "you go on with your dress-making. I'll think a little about this letter."

"I always help with letters to the firm," Mrs. Hicks said as her husband went out. "I don't know much, but I can spell. Georgie can too, but he doesn't bother; you know what I mean, he doesn't take time." "Bessie!" said Miss Dumont.

Mrs. Hicks bent over her sewing, her blond hair falling softly about her pretty little flushed face.

"SAY, IS IT YOU, BANN?"

"You are married to him, but don't pretend not to see him as he is," her sister's voice rang out sharply.

Mrs. Hicks sewed on rapidly without looking up.

"How much did he give you?"

"Whatever it is, Katie, he can't afford it I know," Mrs. Hicks drew the crumpled bill from the little chateaucat at her belt. "It's—mercy on me, it's a ten!"

Miss Dumont reached for the money.

"You can have some pumps and a pair of silk stockings, as well as the ribbon," she said more gently.

Mrs. Hicks stuck out her heavy-soled little boot, while a joyous smile conquered the guilty droop about the pretty mouth.

"You've a pretty little foot, Bessie," her sister said, "you're pretty all over, but so dowdy. He's much better dressed than you. He has a solitaire too."

Mrs. Hicks sighed.

"He had that before we were married. You see he's always been used to nice things and I never have. The nicest things I've ever had were the presents you sent me on my birthdays and Christmas. Georgie's always worn lisle socks with fancy silk clocks on the ankles and all kinds of ties and bordered handkerchiefs. He couldn't live without his cologne."

Miss Dumont shrugged.

"He ought to try," she said. "After you've once got your foot inside a silk stocking it won't be easy to wear cotton."

"Katie," Mrs. Hicks said softly, "it was good of him to bring me along on this trip so I could see you in New York. It cost a lot extra. He could have left me home in Jacksonville and had the money to spend. You know what I mean, some men would do that way."

"What ails you?" Miss Dumont cried, rising from her chair, "what in the world ails you?" she reiterated shrilly. "A pretty little young thing like you married to a man twice your age! You'd have let him leave you at home, wouldn't you?"

Tears stole down Mrs. Hicks' cheeks.

"Don't cry on your new skirt and spoil it before it's finished," Miss Dumont folded up the little bodice she was making to go with the new skirt and placed it in a drawer of her chiffonier. "You needn't have married him just because father died," she said. "You could have come on here to me. I'd have got you a position as nice as mine."

"We were engaged before father died," sobbed Mrs. Hicks softly. "There were plenty of girls wanted George."

Miss Dumont turned her face, hitting a little unpleasant smile. She went to her wardrobe and from it brought a scented silken rustling mass, swathed in white wrapping.

"The lady whose amantensis I am," she said, removing the cover and revealing a golden spangled gown, "gave me this, after she had worn it once!"

Mrs. Hicks sprang up with a pleasurable little cry. She caught at the dress, and upon her left hand, "well, it's Mr. Porter's private secretary I'm engaged to. Arthur's a climber and we may wait five years yet. Then, I shall only be thirty."

Miss Dumont slipped the spangled frock over her sister's yellow head and began hooking it.

"I'd like to have you here in New York with me. I'd polish you up. You're pretty, and quick at getting on to things."

Mrs. Hicks threw out her bare arms with a wondrous cry at her lovely shining image in the mirror. Her sister tossed her some stilted-heeled gold slippers from a drawer of the chiffonier. Mrs. Hicks slipped into them. The slippers raised her and lifted the dress from the floor. She began swaying to and fro, humming softly and eyeing her reflection, whirled round in a mad little waltz. Waving her arms above her head she gavotted about, gold slippers flashing, with little kicks from out of the billowy silk and spangles.

She suddenly halted, breathless, flushed, her eyes glowing under her yellow hair, disheveled.

"Oh, Georgie," she breathed shyly.

Mr. Hicks's pompous person filled the doorway. Wonder and admiration dimpled his round, fat face.

"Say, is it you, babe?" he asked, pushing his hat to the back of his head.

His wife swept him a courtesy.

Hicks approached her with open arms.

"Don't spoil my dress!" cried Miss Dumont. "Wait until she's out of it!"

"How much is one like that—Katie Kathleen?" Mr. Hicks asked, as he paused.

Miss Dumont shrugged her shoulders.

"Oh, I can imagine," he said, looking hard at the gown over his eye-glasses. "A couple of hundred, anyhow."

Mrs. Hicks gasped. She shot a quick glance toward her sister. George showed to some advantage there, mentioning the enormous value of a thing like that, without flinching.

"I ought to have been rich," he said, "my tastes run that way—always did." He plucked a raveling from his coat sleeve, pulled his hat over his eyes and, hands in his pockets, took a turn about the room.

"My mother's maiden name was Van Pelt," he said, stopping and looking squarely at Miss Dumont. "Put Hicks to the blush, don't it?" He laughed and looked at his wife. "I've been thinking things over. Try to remember yourself after this as Mrs. Van Pelt. The Hickses are nixy from now on."

Miss Dumont, leaning against the wall with arms folded, narrowed her eyes in a puzzled regard of the man.

"Georgie!" Mrs. Hicks spoke in her little gasping voice, "we couldn't do that! What would they say in Jacksonville? That we're crazy!"

"They ought to see you now," grinned Mr. Hicks, "hadn't they, Kathleen?"

"Why not let her wear the family jewels?" said his sister-in-law.

"Jewels?"

Miss Dumont's eyes were fixed upon the solitaire adorning his plump left hand. He raised it, spreading out and eyeing admiringly each pudgy, well-manicured finger. "I bought that ring with the first money I ever saved," he said.

"When he was only twenty-one," added Mrs. Hicks, "and he just loves it. He's got such a nice hand for a ring."

Mr. Hicks put the hand in his pocket, but looking up, he saw the smile he constantly endeavored to avoid bringing to his sister-in-law's face. He withdrew his hand from his pocket and gazed for a second again, rapturously, uncertainly, at the jewel. Then he removed it slowly.

"What finger will it fit, girly?" He moved toward Mrs. Hicks.

She spread out both hands, looking from him to her sister.

"Isn't he just the best ever?" she cooed as he fitted on the ring.

"The ring can be cut down to fit her," Miss Dumont said.

"Have that done to-morrow," agreed Mr. Hicks.

He stood looking from one to the other, his eyes lingering upon his sister-in-law, seeking some sign of her approval.

She yawned.

"I have to be up early to-morrow," she said, "Mrs. Porter wants some invitations gotten up."

"Good-night," said Mr. Hicks, "I'll go on up to our room."

"I'm coming, Georgie," called his wife, "as soon as I take off Katie's dress."

Miss Dumont stood, still leaning against the wall, with folded arms, regarding her sister.

"How can you tolerate him, Bessie?" she asked harshly.

Mrs. Hicks looked back at her sister with frightened eyes.

"Tolerate George? Why, Katie, he's awfully good to me. Doesn't he do everything he thinks you think he ought to? Even about his name?"

"Yes," said Miss Dumont, "he's a perfect fool. Left alone you might change your mind, or even he alone could take on another name, but the two of you and back there in Jacksonville with everyone knowing, it's absurd. What does it matter, anyway, there?"

"I won't let him do it," Mrs. Hicks said softly, struggling with the hooks on the gown.

"Look here!" Her sister approached and caught her by the shoulder. "You needn't go back to Jacksonville with him. Let him go alone when his business here is finished. Ask to stay on with me a little longer. I'll get him to leave you. Then—"

"KATHIE RILEY WAS ALL RIGHT BACK THERE IN JACKSONVILLE, BUT IN NEW YORK—"

Miss Dumont whirled her sister, with the eager, scared little face, round and began unfastening the gown, "it'll be easy to get rid of him, Bess. I can manage it for you, dear. You poor little pretty thing! I can't bear to leave my sister to such a fate; it's my duty not to, oh, Bess."

Bessie Hicks looked back into her sister's face. A glow of ambitious pride, of longing and love lit it almost maternally. Tears stood in the handsome dark eyes. Bessie, reaching up her arms, was clasped in her sister's.

"He can't buy things for you, or take you places, or give you your due. He has hardly enough for himself. It nearly killed him to part with that ring and of course he'll want it back. And I know he can't afford the miserable ten dollars. It would buy him some shoes or ties or something, and naturally all this is continually in your mind and on your conscience, child, and it hurts you and doesn't help him."

Miss Dumont folded her golden spangled gown, wrapping it up carefully, while the little disrobed figure of her sister stood huddled, trembling, listening.

"I'll get you a position. There are others like mine. You'll have lovely clothes; you'll go to places abroad with me this summer, if I have to draw my own money out of the bank to take you. Think of it, Bessie."

"Katie, listen," Bessie's teeth were chattering nervously. She caught up her blouse from the floor. "This is a big thing to decide on all at once. I'll have to—you know what I mean—think it over, like. I—I couldn't say to-night I'll do it or that I won't. Where's my old skirt? George has been all I've had for—"

"Certainly, think it over," Miss Dumont caught up the old skirt and slipped it over her sister's head. "I know he's gotten to be a habit. I understand all that."

Miss Dumont kissed her sister.

"Don't go to him with that face. He'll guess I've said something."

"I wouldn't let him suspect," Mrs. Hicks tried to smile, "You've always been mighty good to me too, Katie, remembering me when we've been parted so most all our lives, every birthday and Christmas."

"Go to bed," Miss Dumont led her to the door. "To-morrow when I get back here, we'll go and buy the ribbon and things. I'll keep the ten dollars in my purse, then no one can borrow it back."

"Bessie!" From the floor above came the sleepy voice of Mr. Hicks.

"He'll have all the lodgers awake and the landlady blaming me, Bessie," Miss Dumont pushed her toward the stairs.

"Coming, George," Mrs. Hicks called softly.

Miss Dumont slipped back into her room, closing and locking her door. She moved about thoughtfully, tidying the room,

"I wish Bess was a little more like you," he mused. "I said as much, and she braced up; sat up and looked at me with her eyes like dollars. Now don't you see I'm wise?"

Miss Dumont's firm straight shoulders twitched in something like a shudder.

"I'll tell you," she said, "it's so late, suppose we leave the matter until to-morrow?"

"Well, good heavens," Mr. Hicks got up, "you see I'm right, don't you? I was sure you'd back me up. Your ideas and mine are about alike, it seems to me."

"Does it?" Miss Dumont stepped to the door and opened it. "All right," she said, "we'll talk it over to-morrow. Good-night."

Mr. Hicks went on reluctantly.

"Ta-ta," he said, "you'll talk to Bess to-morrow, too."

Miss Dumont re-closed and locked her door. She paused and with despairing gesture, sank into a chair.

"Oh!" she sobbed, "if Bessie can only get him back to Jacksonville. Poor little Bess."

"Here, open the door again! Open this damn'd door—" It was the wild, excited voice of Mr. Hicks.

He shook the door with mumbblings and oaths. Miss Dumont hurried to unlock it.

"Here," the man burst in wildly, waving a sheet of paper, "now see what you've done with your high-falutin' ideas, Kate Riley. She's gone back to Jacksonville, gone alone gone back—to—" Mr. Hicks sobbed, waving the paper and drawing his bath-robe about him wildly, "gone back to live by little Georgie's grave. O my God!"

"Hush," Miss Dumont pleaded, "please try not to arouse the house."

She took the paper from him.

"It's you," he went on, "you and your ideas that's done it. She's gone alone!" He rushed to the door and returned frantically. "She's got the train and there ain't another till day-time. Once we'd planned to go back on the train she's got and she took her return ticket from my pocket."

"Keep quiet and let me read what she says," Miss Dumont begged.

"She says how well I'll get on without her. How I can make plenty for one, but not for two. How she handicaps me. How this city is the place for folks like me and you, but not for her. She's contented with Jacksonville where little Georgie was born and died and is buried, and she's gone—" He sank sobbing into a chair.

Miss Dumont tried to read the little tear-stained note.

"Georgie!"

"You're not to worry about me one bit. I can't keep you down any longer; with Katie to help you there's not anything you can't do. I haven't fled to tell you, but I hate New York and I am going home. I'll board just the same with old Mr. Kelly and I can earn enough to pay it by sewing. I want to be near little Georgie."

"It's your doings," Mr. Hicks broke out again, rising. "She'll go back there alone and—why, somebody'll marry her."

He rushed back to the door. "They's a train in the morning early. I'll go and get dressed. It's all your doing." He pulled up sharply.

In the hall, a little figure, hat and veil askew, hair tumbling down, drooped forlornly.

"I missed the train."

"O my God! What good luck!" Mr. Hicks caught the little figure frantically to him. "We'll catch the seven o'clock in the morning."

"Georgie!" Mrs. Hicks dropped her hand-bag, and threw her arms about her husband's neck, "oh, Georgie!"

Over his shoulder she looked at her sister.

"Katie, dear, I—I love him," Mr. Hicks missed the note of apology in his wife's sobbing voice.

"Of course you do, dear," Miss Dumont stepped into the hall and patted Mrs. Hicks's little hand that rested upon her husband's shoulder, "and he loves you and needs you. Knock on my door to say good-by before your train goes in the morning."

"Yes, Katie," Mrs. Hicks whispered shyly, as Mr. Hicks drew her up the stairs.

"I'll say good-by now," Mr. Hicks turned and shook his sister-in-law's hand warmly. "Good luck!"

"Thank you," she answered.

She slipped again into her room and locked the door.

"I was mistaken. I couldn't make my sister as happy as he does." She reached out and switched off the light. "I wonder if I've anything like Hicks," she whispered.

He'll have all the lodgers awake and

WEEKLY Winter is coming.

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, illustrating it with sketches and photographs of her own original models.

Lady Duff-Gordon's new Paris establishment brings her into close touch with that centre of fashion.

Too hot to think of furs? Not at all. While the mercury is scorching the famous furriers of London, Paris and New York are busy designing new creations which are of intense interest to every woman who wishes to bid charming defiance of Jack Frost next Winter.

On this page you get a cooling advance peep at the very newest styles of wraps. And they all show, as you will be quick to notice, a more decided novelty than has been seen in furs for many seasons.

The day of the close-fitting fur coat or cape is fast passing—already gone, say many designers. In its place comes the loose wrap of odd design, draping itself in the most fascinating manner about the shoulders.

One reason for this change in fur fashions is the universal popularity of the automobile. The fur coat which is necessary when motoring in cold weather is altogether too heavy to wear when walking even the short distance from the motor to restaurant, theatre or ballroom. So one leaves the heavy garment in the car and wraps herself in one of the new loose-fitting and really charming fur creations when she steps outside.

But there will be time enough to tell you more of the new furs. Meanwhile I must chronicle the re-entry of the pleated tulle neck ruffle, which has been banished for some time by the closely clinging scarf and stole. It is looking so very pliant and pretty that we are all inclined to take it to our hearts and our necks again.

Quite a novelty, too, are the scarfs of white muslin and broderie Anglaise which are being prepared for the Summer, when there is also promised a certain vogue for lace scarfs whose mellow tone will be in keeping with their old designs.

Newly Found Mask in Which a Tuft of Red Hair, Believed to Be From Shakespeare's Own Head, Was Discovered.

Found—the Death Mask of Shakespeare?

MOST surprising and romantic discovery is now exciting Shakespearean scholars and enthusiasts in England.

A collector recently picked up an old terra cotta mask of Shakespeare in an English country town for seventy cents. The price alone was an indication that it was not an intentional fraud, since no one would have taken so much trouble practically for nothing.

The relic was submitted to Mr. P. G. Konody, who is a well-known authority on Shakespearean relics. He was at once struck by its similarity in proportions to the well-known bust in the church of Stratford-on-Avon. This bust is believed on good evidence to have been made from a death mask of Shakespeare.

In spite of a certain woodenness about the face due to an inferior sculptor, this mask in the church is the most reliable guide we have hitherto had to the shape of the poet's head and face.

Mr. Konody at first formed the idea that the terra cotta mask might have been modelled from the bust, but a comparison of the two caused him to abandon this idea.

A very peculiar thing he discovered about the terra cotta mask was a noticeable projection of the tip of the eye. This is a feature to be observed in nearly every human body, but it was not to be found in the bust at Stratford-on-Avon and probably few English sculptors of that time were aware of this physiological fact.

Moreover, the mysterious mask showed a strange death-like droop of the right corner of the mouth. On the other hand the modelling of the nose and cheeks was strikingly clumsy and seemed incompatible with the idea that the terra cotta mask could have been taken from the mold made from the face of the dead poet.

Is it possible that the newly discovered mask is the remodelled impression or "squeeze" of Shakespeare's death mask from which the sculptor of the old bust worked? This began to appear to Mr. Konody the most probable theory.

When the investigation had reached this point a new discovery was made which greatly increased the probability of the theory. There were some bad styles on the head and the owner rather carelessly gave it to a servant with orders to wash them out with hot water. The heat caused a crack to open in the material just above the ear, where the hair began.

In this crack, greatly to the amazement of Mr. Konody, was found a tuft of red hair. Medical experts declared that it was human hair. The most reasonable explanation of its presence was that the mask had been made from an original death mask. Some of the hair had been pulled away from the head by the death mask and then transferred to this impression or squeeze. If the squeeze was really taken from a death mask it must have been Shakespeare's death mask, for he is certainly the man portrayed.

THE STAGE

Miss Ruth St. Denis, who is a conspicuous figure in the American theater because of her wonderful East Indian and oriental dances, is to star this season in a drama depicting life in India. Miss St. Denis will appear as a dancer and will introduce several new dances into the action of the play.

ROBERT EDESON.
Who is spending his summer vacation at his home, Strongheart, at Sag Harbor, will be seen in a new play this season. Edeson scored his most substantial success in "Strongheart," but of gratitude to the play which "made him" he has named his country home after it. Edeson is very fond of outdoor sports.

ROLE LUCK PLAYS

From
THE MUSICAL COURIER.

RECENTLY one of the Paris French publications (for there are others than French) went out on an inquiry to prominent literary, musical and artistic people of the world here asking: what views they held on the influence upon life and careers by the elements of accident and luck, and a number of replies came in return showing, naturally from a personal impressionistic viewpoint, how this influence was regarded. What role does luck play in the success of your life? The large majority of those who are recognized as having made successful careers intimate or state that luck had less influence than work, capacity and will power. Jules Lemaitre says: "The imagination of accident is without basis and is believed only through instinct, because of the sense of justice that pervades humanity." Jules Claretie, of the Comedie Francaise, declares that luck has a powerful influence which, however, must not be exaggerated. "Such officer was successful because his company or battalion had a preferred position assigned to it," he says, "yet the best accidental on the path to success is work." Paul Ivoi divides success into two categories. Either the thought is practicalized at the cost of personal advantage or the personal advantage is gained at the cost of the idea. But, he believes, no matter how difficult either path to success may prove to be, the force behind is one-fourth luck and three-fourths power of the will.

AT THE LOCAL PLAYHOUSES THIS WEEK.

BOOK PLAY AT OPERA HOUSE

"The House of a Thousand Candles," a dramatization by George Middleton of Meredith Nicholson's well-known novel, will be the offering of the Opera House company at the Opera House for four nights this week, commencing tomorrow night, with a matinee Wednesday afternoon. "The House of a Thousand Candles" has been seen in this city but it is doubtful whether either of the road productions of the play could compare with the one which the Opera House will present at the Opera House this week.

A more ideal story for a play than that of "The House of a Thousand Candles" could be difficult to imagine. It has romance, melodrama, comedy and near-tragedy. The love story is unique in its way, the leading character in the drama, Bates, the Butler, does not marry the heroine.

The play follows the novel closely in every detail. The fascination of this romantic mystery is felt in the drama as keenly as it is in reading the book. Bates, of quiet, subtle humor, the excitable Larry Griffin, John Glenarm, the baffled hero, the charming Gladys and the fetching Marian all figure in the play. The plot is one of the most interesting, original and compelling stories a modern novelist has evolved in many a day.

Theodore Lorch, well known locally to the role, will appear as Bates. Cecil Fay will play Marian and Julia Rosen will have the role of Gladys. Marian's friend, James Hawley, appears as Larry Griffin. The staging of the play will reproduce all the effects carried by the road company.

"The House of a Thousand Candles" will be played four nights and Wednesday matinee and Friday and Saturday nights and Saturday matinee. A comedy of middle-western life will be produced.

VAUDEVILLE AT MAJESTIC

Manager Tammen of the Majestic is entitled to thanks for having booked for this week a vaudeville show that will add so much to the pleasure and entertainment of the city's thousands of carnival visitors as the bill which opened a week's engagement yesterday is sure to do. It is most appropriately a comedy offering, quite in accord with the spirit of gaiety that will prevail this week and a distinct contribution to it.

There is a patriotic element in the bill in the person of Miss Sadie Sherman, known as "the American maid," who is the pet of the patriotic organizations of the country. Miss Sherman's great-grandfather was an officer in the Mayflower; another ancestor signed the Declaration of Independence and others have been prominent in every war the United States has had, while her great-uncle is now vice president. Miss Sherman is a dainty little comedienne and her cosmopolitan characterizations are immensely entertaining. Wednesday evening will be Grand Army night at the Majestic and the local post and affiliated patriotic societies will attend in a body.

Frank Graham and Edith Randall in "A Gay Old Boy" contribute much to the fun, and Miss Randall brings in an Anna Held imitation and other novelties that help it along. Charles D. Webster, the comedy juggler, is another great funmaker, his comedy being original and his juggling remarkable. Edward Barto and Florence Clark are mirth-provokers in a sketch called "Sixty-five on the Second Floor Back," in which singing, dancing and a lot of dialogue predominate. Still a fifth enjoyable act is the aerial performance of La Vie, the European athlete, who does some new and spectacular feats.

In addition to all these features, two of the high-class motion picture plays for which the Majestic is celebrated, and the concert orchestra music which is one of the always pleasurable features of the Majestic program, are included in this special offering for carnival visitors, thousands of whom will find in the Majestic one of the pleasantest attractions of their stay in the Pike Peak region.

Performances at 2:30, 7:30 and 9:10.

On the left is Emma Cook, playing in "The Merry Whirl" at the Columbia. The large picture in the center is of Rose Lubow, whose character work in "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" at Cohen's has done much to keep that play on the boards through New York's summer season. The small picture in the center is of Mrs. Coburn, as Beatrice, in "Much Ado About Nothing," played by the Coburn players. On the right is Lillian Lorraine, as she appears as "Squabina" in "Every Wife" at the Jardin de Paris, where "The Follies of 1911" are making a record summer run.

New York Theatrical Letter

By EMORY CALVERT.

NEW YORK, July 29.—History tells us that Mr. Therps went to his grave some two thousand years ago. The theatrical world of the metropolis rivals his calm repose. All the really big stars are resting at their country estates; all little ones are in vaudeville and all the rest are looking for jobs. The great White Way awaits the cooling hand of autumn to quicken it into life.

Roof gardens, beaches and amusement parks have reached the apogee of their success. Thousands seek the cooling breezes of open air entertainment, for every one who purchases a ticket for the few remaining winter successes. And everywhere theaters, whose lobbies will swarm with eager winter patrons, are basking in the mid-summer heat unattended by even a much needed scrub woman.

But for all its apparent lethargy Broadway has moments of animation—moments when it gives evidence that the summer season has advanced a pace and that theatrical seeds are being sown for a winter crop of plays. This animation, however, waxes and wanes with the mercurial thermometer. When it's hot there's "nothing doing," but when a cool day makes its appearance the flaxen-haired press agents wax eloquent. Broadway is indebted to the weather and the F. A.'s for the following:

Raymond Hitchcock has been lured from the wilds of Dubuque county long enough to sign a Cohen and Harris contract for the winter season. He will play in "The Red Widow."

Clifton Crawford has been engaged by Henry B. Harris for the principal male role in "The Quaker Girl," a musical play that will appear at the Majestic early in October. Miss Daphne Glenn has also been engaged for an important part in the same play.

Alla Nazimova will make her debut under Charles Frohman's management, but the name of the play is shrouded in mystery. Mme. Nazimova is spending her vacation at Mr. Clemens, Michigan, but is so busy studying the English language that she, too, refuses to talk. Press agents say it's a world heater.

Aside from these verdant announcements a retrospective glance gives rise to considerable comment upon the great number of roles who will be mixed up in the plots of this winter's Broadway offerings. These priestly roles will have their inception with the production of "The Garden of Allah" at the Century. When in rapid succession will follow Elyse Bellow in "Thais," Orrin Johnson in "Father Jerome" and many more too numerous to mention.

The sudden outbreak of priestly characters occurs not because managers have any particular desire to present priests on the stage, but simply because priests are tangled up in all the plots which the managers have chosen for the coming season.

In one production, Edward Peple's "The Broken Rosary," not one but half a dozen priests will figure in the plot. This is the dramatization of the novel Miss Margaret Anglin was most eager to produce before she turned her attention exclusively to comedy. A. W. Woods has taken charge of the play and promises a most lavish production.

Ruth St. Denis is giving her Oriental dance, "The Five Senses," on the Victoria roof. Her appearance was greeted vociferously by those who know her through the elaborate productions she has given in some of the Broadway playhouses.

"The Coburn players" again demonstrated the popularity of all fresco frames with the more intelligent of theater patrons. They played "Much Ado About Nothing" on Tuesday, "Electra of Euripides" on Wednesday, "The Taming of the Shrew" on Thursday, "Macbeth" on Friday, "As You Like It" this afternoon, and "The Canterbury Pilgrims" by Percy MacNaye, this evening.

The performances were given on the green at Columbia university, and were attended by great numbers of the better elements of the tergoers.

"Atlas Jimmy Valentine" is being produced at the Theater de la Renaissance, Paris, under the title of "The Mysterious Jimmy." It was adapted to the French by Mme. Aves Mirande and Henri Meroule. The general verdict of the press seems to be favorable to the play.

Morton and Moore will begin the eighth week of their successful engagement in "The Merry Widow" at the Columbia on Monday. It has been decided to continue the run up to August 12th, the beginning of the regular season at the Columbia.

"The Pink Lady" is still drawing large audiences at the New Amsterdam and shows no sign of abating popularity, though it has passed its second century mark.

Miss Ethel Barrymore, the noted actress who has filed a divorce suit. Miss Barrymore was married almost two years ago to a wealthy easterner. The reasons for the divorce have not been made known. Miss Barrymore recently closed her western tour in Sacramento, Cal., in order to return to New York and personally attend to the matter. Miss Barrymore has one child, a boy.

Edith Randall, of Graham and Randall, at the Majestic this week.

Miss Marie Lohr, the well-known actress, who, according to London rumor, is engaged to be married to Lord Howard de Walden, one of the wealthiest peers in England. Miss Lohr was for several months engaged to Robert Lorraine, the actor-aviator, but her mother strenuously objected to the match, and it was finally broken. Lord DeWalden, who is related to the Duke of Portland, owns vast property in London and the provinces. He is still a young man. If this new match is definitely arranged, Miss Lohr will become the wife of one of the most powerful and interesting peers in the British empire.

FRANK MCINTYRE.
Who first came into prominence in support of Robert Edeson in "Strongheart," has finished a three-year engagement in the title role of "The Traveling Salesman." Next season he will be starred under the management of Henry B. Harris in a new comedy, entitled "Snobs." McIntyre belongs to Arbuckle's class of the heavyweight comedians.

STAGE NEOPHYTES

By
FRANKLIN H. SARGENT.

THE most striking trait of the stage neophyte is his unpreparedness. He, or more often she, has been encouraged by friends or by some thoughtless actor, and perhaps made obstinate by the opposition of parents, to go upon the stage totally unready and ignorant of what he or she is plunging into, and not even tested as to his or her fitness to enter upon a most difficult task requiring the finest technical skill, philosophical reasoning power and profound feeling and purpose. He tries to learn to swim, so to speak, by plunging into deep water—with his head on! Naturally, after the first cold shock of disillusionment, finding no bottom, he founders in a state of perplexity.

Every one about him is too much occupied with self to render much assistance. The easiest way is usually chosen. This is impulsively to imitate the principal swimmers in that particular theatrical pool, blind to originality and studious intelligence. In that way the stage-beginner may save his salary—even though he may prospectively ruin his art. Unless superior to his environment, in most cases he will in time establish a sort of crude constructive reasoning, a very limited mechanical dexterity, and a very good knowledge and command of the tricks of the trade.

For the trained mind and body of the young man or woman who has been first thoroughly examined as to dramatic capabilities, selected as naturally qualified for a theatrical career, severely discouraged if not qualified, and carefully prepared for that career if sufficiently promising, for such trained capacity the first actual experience in the theater, in however small capacity, can never be wasteful or foolish. Proper training is condensed experience, plus disciplined faculties and an established art creed. Such training should accomplish in one year what would require several years of ordinary theatrical experience, barring, of course, certain essential practicalities which can be learned only in the routine of the theater and before an audience.

The untrained beginner in the stock company of today is in a particularly unfortunate situation. He has no resources such as the older experienced or the younger and trained actors have; no standards of the art, no established modes of work and study, and no time or inducement or advantages for improvement or study of the best essentials of the actor's art. He is swept along in the tide of hurried preparation of many plays and frequent performances. Careless habits, imperfect ideas and weakened ideals are the permanent outcome combined with the gain of assurance and clever sleight-of-hand and slight-of-lips—which replaces thorough, painstaking growth and achievement. Great credit is due to those who succeed in holding themselves aloft in breaking the tide and in avoiding the aimless drift that absorbs so many.

Dramatic teaching has become a special profession in itself. Dramatic pedagogy is a science in its early stage of evolution. It involves a deeper and more comprehensive education for the actor's physical instruments, for the instincts, imagination and dramatic powers of the mind, and conceptive and emotional faculties than is possible in the present-day theater.

Prejudice against formulated dramatic teaching is born of ignorance of what it is and what it does. There is a tendency to estimate the whole scope of such work by the activities of charlatans and weaklings. As well pass judgment upon the whole dramatic profession by pointing at its worst or most disreputable members. It is natural that many an actor will support the particular form of training that he or she has personally obtained, and condemn everything not personally experienced. Some actors, like Mascaille in Moliere's Tartuffe, say: "I never study. Everything comes perfectly natural to me." The whole process of rehearsal is a process of teaching, and all actors are pupils of the stage-manager. Every actor has had some form of study and training, even the untrained actor, for it is simply a question which is the best of pittoresque Bohemia or that of progressive civilization.

Miss Gertrude Coghlan, who is a member of the famous Coghlan family, has been appearing in support of Frank McIntyre in "The Traveling Salesman" for the past three seasons. She will be seen in a new play this fall. Edson, who started last season in "The Scarecrow" and has been appearing in vaudeville lately, will be featured in a big New York production this season.

NEW GOSSIP OF STAGELAND

RELATIVE OF SHAKESPEARE

The nearest living relative of William Shakespeare has come to this country to attend the Baptist congress in Philadelphia. He is Rev. John Howard Shakespeare, M. A., secretary of the Baptist union of the British Isles. He preached last Sunday at the New York Fifth Avenue Baptist church, where a large congregation was present.

Mr. Shakespeare is a descendant of the grandfather of the bard. The churches were anxious to realize, he said, that the man in the street was indifferent to the all, and all alike, that the great masses were indifferent to God as well as to the church, to the Bible, to the future life.

"And it is Christ that must be preached," he said, "Christ and his life, and works and intercession," to offset the materialism of the age.

Mr. Shakespeare is in charge of a large European delegation to the congress in Philadelphia, many of them from the Balkan countries and from Russia.

I am the only Shakespeare who ever was born outside of Stratford-on-Avon," explained the clergyman. "I came into the world at Yorkshire. The Shakespeares for all three generations have been buried at Stratford-on-Avon."

BERNHARDT TO RETIRE

Mme. Bernhardt says she will remain on the stage as long as she can play "L'Aiglon." She epitomizes thus: "I shall remain as long as I am able to portray the parts I am now playing. I will put it more concisely. I shall keep on playing as long as I can play 'L'Aiglon.' Ah, that is the touchstone. There you have youth, masculine youth, virility, energy, life, gaiety, sadness, tragedy—everything. As long as I can play 'L'Aiglon' nothing is impossible."

Miss Anna Held will come forth in the autumn in a French farce which will be set to music. Harry Watson, who has been in her companies before, will be Miss Held's chief comedian.

In view of the publication of Wagner's autobiography, the following advertisement from the Berliner Tageblatt comes as a coincidence. "Villa to be let in Lucerne. The Villa Tribschen (Richard Wagner's domicile, 1868-1873), situate in most glorious surroundings on, and commanding perfect view of the Vierwaldstattersee, contains: Fourteen reception and living rooms, kitchen, cellar, bathroom, etc. Annual rental, 2,000." It was here that the composer wrote his autobiography, which comprises his reminiscences from 1812 to 1884, based on diaries and notes kept uninterruptedly since 1832.

W. H. CRANE'S NEW PLAY

It is reported that William H. Crane purposes a revival of David Dumas' "The Sign of the Cross," next season. Mr. Crane first played the part of Senator Hannibal Rivers in this place in 1890.

The Cooky Lady and Mister Mouse

By BESSIE CAHOONE NEWTON

THE COOKY LADY was born on the rolling-board one Saturday morning in Susie's mother's kitchen. Her birthday came on "baking day," which is a most important day in every house.

"What can you do with the 'left-lady with the handle of a fork," she said. "This round part is her head, this is her neck, and here are her shoulders. We can pretend she has on a long cloak down to her feet—just like your kimono, Susie. The big sleeves will hide her hands."

"She is a lady," said Susie. "But how are you going to cut her out of that dough?"

"With a knife," answered Susie's mother, cutting the edges away from the Cooky Lady.

At last she lay upon the board, waiting to have her face made up. Susie put two big raisins in the upper part of her face for eyes. They looked two ways at once, those raisin eyes, but that made no difference to the Cooky Lady's sight.

"Mother," said Susie. "Her eyes seem to be looking for her nose and mouth." "They do look lonesome," agreed Susie's mother. "Suppose we put on a ball of dough for the lady's nose and a slice of citron for the lady's mouth."

"She is a lady now," said Susie, as she saw the face growing under her mother's skilful fingers. "Oh, what are you putting around her head?"

"A fold of dough pleated to look like a bonnet-facing. Can't you see, my child?" answered Susie's mother, as she made a bow of the ends of the dough and placed it under the lady's chin.

"I don't want to shut her up in the big, hot oven," cried Susie, as she saw the lady put into the pan.

"But we must put her in the oven, my child," said Susie's mother, "because, you see, she is very thin and pale. She needs a season in a tropical climate to make her fat and brown."

In a few minutes Susie and her mother took a peek to see what was happening in the oven. There was the Cooky Lady, growing fatter and browner every minute.

It seemed almost as though the lady breathed, because she puffed in such a funny little way and sent out such warm, delicious breaths. She spoke in a tiny, hissing voice that Susie could hear by putting her ear close to the pan in which the lady lay—fat and brown and beautiful.

"We must leave the lady in the oven for just a few minutes more," explained Susie's mother, as she carefully closed the door.

The next time they looked the Cooky Lady was "done." She looked truly good enough to eat.

"Oh, Mother," cried Susie as they took the pan out of the oven. "I want to make some clothes for her. Haven't you some cooky cloth in the kitchen?"

"There's frosting plenty of it," said Susie's mother, thinking very fast. "We can make a white coat with pink trimmings—there's a bottle of cochineal in the pantry."

"May the Cooky Lady have some pink roses in her bonnet?" asked Susie, when she saw her mother making a tube for the pink frosting.

First, mother put on the white frosting and then the pink. Mother used the tube as if it were a pencil and drew pink roses on the bonnet and buttons on the coat.

"She looks just like me now," said Susie, who had a pink-and-white kimono of her own. "Why can't I call her 'Susie,' because she's my little girl?"

"I think I would call the lady 'Susette,'" answered Susie's mother. "That would be a good name for Susie's very little girl."

"Isn't Susette a lovely dolly, Mother?" asked Susie. "I could never eat her now, because she is so 'really truly' isn't she?"

"If you feel that way," said Susie's mother, "why don't you eat some of my cookies and take Susette up-stairs to live with your doll-family?"

"I am afraid they would eat her right straight up," said Susie, with tears in her eyes. "I shall put her up high on the mantelpiece 'long-side the clock. Then I can look at the Cooky Lady every time I eat, that will be more fun than eating the Cooky Lady all at once."

That was Susie put Susette on the mantelpiece beside the clock, who talked all day long and all night, too.

Sometimes the clock was noisy and called right out loud.

One moonlight night, when Susie was asleep in bed, Mr. Mouse came sneaking up out of his hole to see what he could find out. Mr. Mouse came very softly, sniffing every inch of the way.

"I wonder what that creature up on the shelf can be?" thought Mr. Mouse to himself, as he saw Susette standing

"This creature can't be very old, or it would have chased me out of Susette's cloak."

Before Mr. Mouse knew what could be the matter the lady toppled and fell forward, down, down, down to the floor.

"Snap!" she cried, as she broke into a hundred pieces.

Susette was no longer a lady—she was only one hundred frosted crumbs.

Mr. Mouse went to tell the other mice of his visit to the floor above. The mice all drew around him to listen to his tale of the world above stairs.

"She was a terrible creature, this lady," explained Mr. Mouse. "She was as large as a cat. Her eyes were big enough to make a meal for a whole family. But the creature is sweet unto the taste. She lies safely on the floor above in a hundred pieces. It is a beautiful moonlight night and the family are all fast asleep. Come, let us go up and have a party."

One by one the mice came scampering out of the hole, until a large circle of them stood around the hearthstone where the Cooky Lady lay in a hundred pieces.

"We shall have to eat and run," explained Mr. Mouse. "That must ever be the way with us."

All you could hear in that room was the grinding of sharp teeth and the ticking of the clock. The mice nibbled at every piece but the best piece of all. That was the piece with the two raisins and the slice of citron on it. The mice walked all around it as it lay on the floor beside the hearth.

"Why are the rest of you afraid of that thing?" asked a very young and foolish mouse. "I am going to pick the eyes out one by one and take them to my nest."

As the young mouse put his teeth into one of the raisin eyes, the rest all looked up in horror, for the clock spoke right out loud:

"One—Two—Three—Four—Five—Six—Seven—Eight—Nine—Ten—Eleven—Twelve!" The little mice were all down the hole and out of sight before the clock stopped talking.

All that Susie ever found of the Cooky Lady was a big frosted crumb with the two raisins and a piece of citron on it. Susie never knew what had happened that night, for nobody but the old clock and the little mice knew the secret. And they never told.

ALL THAT SUSIE EVER FOUND OF THE COOKY LADY.

all white and still, in the moonlight. "I must be careful," said Mr. Mouse to himself. "For I have no right to run any risks when Mrs. Mouse and the six little Mousies are waiting for me to bring back their bread—and cheese, I hope," added Mr. Mouse, who was always risking his life for cheese.

"What can that creature be?" asked Mr. Mouse again. "I am afraid of those eyes; they are as big as cat's. Do you suppose the creature has claws?"

All the clock answered was "tick-tock, tick-tock."

Mr. Mouse stared at Susette and Susette stared at Mr. Mouse for a long time, until Mr. Mouse had to wink one of his bright black eyes. But Susette never took one of her eyes from his face.

Mr. Mouse looked at Susette more closely. "I think," he said, "she must be a lady. She looks like the lady who cooks the pies and cakes in this house, but she doesn't try to chase you out of it. She looks as if she were very sweet."

He went on Mr. Mouse, as he gave the Cooky Lady a kiss and then another—and yet another!

The truth is, Mr. Mouse found the kisses so sweet that he felt as if he could just "eat the lady up." But still he was afraid of the big eyes that shone so in the moonlight.

"I think I'll come down from the clock," he said "and take a bite off the bottom of the lady's dress. It lies right on the shelf."

Mr. Mouse took only little nibbles at first—nothing happened. After that, Mr. Mouse went on taking big nibbles.

Flag Cake

The crown of the feast, and a beautiful surprise, is a flag cake. Make a cake of three layers, coloring one layer with the ordinary red coloring, and another with either indigo or aquamarine. Put the layers together with icing. Make a plain white frosting; color one-fourth with the red and ice the top of the cake with alternate stripes of red and white. Now color a little of the white with the blue; mark off a square in the upper left-hand corner, cover with the blue icing and on this put dots of white to represent stars. Ice the sides with the white.

Animals that Work

CATERPILLARS are silk-spinners. Wasps make paper.

The bird Ploceus taylor is a weaver; he weaves a web to make his nest.

The bird called the nine-killer is an arithmetician.

Whole tribes of birds are musicians. The ants have regular day laborers.

The white ants maintain a regular army of soldiers.

The East India ants are horticulturists; they raise mushrooms, upon which they feed their young.

The mole is a meteorologist. The monkey is a rope dancer.

The torpedo, the ray and the electric eel are electricians.

The squirrel is a feynman; with a chip or piece of bark for a boat, and his fall for a sail, he crosses a stream.

Dogs, wolves, jackals and many others are hunters.

The black bear and the heron are fishymen.

The nautilus is a navigator; he raises and lowers his sails, cuts and weighs anchor, and performs other nautical evolutions.

Bees are geometricians; their cells are so constructed as, with the least quantity of material, to have the largest-sized spaces, and the least possible loss of interstice.

So also is the ant-flea; his funnel-shaped trap is exactly correct in its conformation, as if it had been made by the most skilful artist of our species with the aid of the best instruments.

The marmot is a civil-engineer; he not only builds houses, but also constructs aqueducts and drains to keep them dry.

The beaver is an architect, builder and wood-cutter—he cuts down trees and builds dams and dams. S. N. H.

Teddy Sees the Zoo

LESLIE MARY OYLER.

SIS, Geoffrey, and Michael once went to the Zoo. And Sis said she must take her Teddy Bear, too.

"We'll show him the bears in their cages," cried Sis. "I expect they're his cousins—how pleased they will be!"

"Yes, let's put him in the cage," Geoffrey replied.

And, picking up Teddy, he popped him inside.

The bear stared in surprise at the sight.

And Edwin, her son, crouched behind in a fright.

Then, snatching up Teddy, the bear, in a rage,

Growled, "Go, or I'll hurt you; get out of our cage!"

"Oh, oh!" screamed poor Sis, and she started to cry.

But, just at that moment, the keeper came by.

And said, very kindly, "I've brought the bear's tea."

I'll soon get your Teddy back, missey, you'll see."

The bears started eating at once—he was right.

And Teddy was saved, to the children's delight!

THE BIRTHDAY OF THE COOKY LADY.

And the water gurgles o'er the rocks and glistens in the sun.

The ringdoves, cooling in the wood, looked on and saw the fun.

The grass was soft and verdant, it was decked with daisies white,

And we called a Council there To elect a new Lord Mayor.

And the lot it fell on Richard, who received it with delight.

Then Elsie, who is Queen of May—the sweetest little maid—

And her attendant Duchesses came dancing down the glade,

And all of them wore coronets of daisies in their hair.

And they sang a song of greeting to Sir Dick, the new Lord Mayor.

While we drank his health in lemonade and quaffed the sparkling foam,

His mother came along, In the middle of the song;

She said 'twas getting late for him and so she took him home.

INDIA WILL FEEL BURDEN OF EXPENSE FOR CROWNING EMPEROR, FOR YEARS.

India will feel burden of expense for crowning emperor, for years.

Roads, Railways and Sanitation Extensively Improved in Honor of Event.

LONDON, July 29.—From the beginning of September King George will have his hands full preparing for a long trip to India and all the details of his coronation at Delhi will be submitted to him.

No official program of that great event has yet been made public, but preparations are already in full swing, and none too early, for they involve the reconstruction of the city of Delhi, roads, streets, railways and sanitation all being extensively improved.

King George will be the first English sovereign to be crowned in India with the title of "Emperor of India," and, like Napoleon the Great, he will perform the act of crowning himself to impress upon the minds of the natives of India that no living mortal is worthy of carrying out this act. In England, he is king by the grace of God, bound by his solemn oath to respect the constitution, a figurehead without any real power, a representative and servant of the people, but he is emperor of India because he chooses to be, and in the eyes of the natives he possesses almost supernatural power.

Making Special Crowns.

Special crowns are being made for the king and queen, and these will be far more gorgeous than those worn in Westminster abbey, for these crowns are to give the poor natives of India an idea of the power and enormous wealth of their emperor. The coronation itself is to take place on December 12, but the king and queen will be in Delhi from December 1 to December 18. The king then leaves for a shooting expedition to Nepal. He will be the guest in a shooting camp of the maharajah. Her majesty will remain at Agra. Among the ceremonies fixed is a state entry into Delhi, presentation of the incense, addresses, and the reception of several thousand Indians in a pavilion on the historic Ridge, where the British camp was during the days of that great mutiny, 50 years ago.

Ruling chiefs are to visit the king during December 1 and 2. His majesty is anxious to come in personal touch with them, and for these two days he will do little but engage in conversation with the rulers. This is thought to be a brilliant stroke of policy, due entirely to the king's perfect comprehension of the whole Indian problem.

It is hoped to make permanent the good effects of his visit to India. The king will not return to the shade in respect his place will be taken by Lord Hardinge, who, when the king steps ashore at Bombay, ceases to be viceroy and becomes simply governor-general.

The Durbar takes place on Tuesday, December 12, and will be witnessed by at least 50,000 people. The scene will be overwhelmingly splendid, even the Indian mind, which expects a great deal. There is to be, another, a review of 50,000 troops. The imperial service troops are to be under the command of their respective chiefs.

Calcutta children will sing their national anthem on their majesty's arrival in that city, in four languages. The coronation, with all its festivity and splendor, will cost far more than the one just celebrated at Westminster, and the people of India will feel the burden of it for many years.

CAN CARRY THIS BOAT IN ORDINARY SUITCASE

PARIS, July 29.—A curiously constructed boat which is so light and compact that it can be packed into a box no larger than an ordinary suitcase is the latest invention in water craft devised by a Parisian.

The case part unfolds and joins together to form the main framework or hull of the boat, which is of the catamaran order. The two cigar-shaped floats are made of waterproof canvas. When packed up they occupy little space, and when in use they are blown up with a bicycle pump. The framework is fastened between them by means of ribs and straps, and when you have fixed a three-bladed double-bladed paddle together and put a folding seat in place you are ready to set out on your maritime travels.

89 DEGREES IN PARIS

PARIS, July 29.—The maximum temperature registered in the shade in Paris for the last week is 89 degrees. There has been a number of fatalities. A house painter, a van driver and a dressmaker who were overcome in the street are in a critical condition.

The Seine baths have been taken by storm and are full of bathers all day. Men and women of the laboring classes whom work keeps them beneath the rays of the sun are wearing paper hats of variegated patterns and shapes. Practically nothing has been done to alleviate the distress of the masses of the poor and the sunbathers.

Poor in French Capital Suffer Most by Water Shortage Is Complaint

PARIS, July 29.—The River Seine has once more to listen to the anathemas of perspiring and thirsty Parisians. Its water is neither cool nor clean. Those who run down the steps at the river's edge to swim a few strokes in one of the quaint old floating baths, so picturesquely described by Du Maurier, probably expect nothing better than what is given them, for which, after all, the sun, the quiet, and the fresh air are some compensation. But it is not the same for the housewife or workman who seeks a refreshing bath in the morning or a cooling drink at night. The water of the Seine flows to them at a temperature of 60 degrees, and with a color which is indefinable. The color is characteristic and peculiar.

Consequently there are thousands of complaints. At present an eighth part of the city's water supply is taken from the river, and, as usual, the poorer quarters on the eastern edge of the city are the first chosen by the water managers. To the bitter complaints of these citizens today are added those of eminent doctors, who rightly point out that with the existing high prices of natural mineral waters in Paris, few of those who are deprived of the regular supply can have recourse to drinking table waters of guaranteed purity.

MONTENEGRO IN THE MIDDLE OF THE BALKANS

BERLIN, July 29.—If the Agadir incident had not come and temporarily overshadowed everything else, the eyes of Europe would surely have been turned towards the Balkans. Here it was old King Nicholas of Montenegro who supplied the sensation, when he called the whole corps diplomates together at the little palace at Cetinje and told the ambassadors that in a few days the whole Montenegrin army would be mobilized for a decisive struggle with the Turks, who are torturing the people of Albania with unheard-of cruelty. The ambassadors were shocked, the old man appeared to be very much in earnest and, war seemed inevitable, but Nicholas of Russia whispered something to Nicholas of Montenegro, Italy and Austria followed suit and the grim old warrior who rules the smallest kingdom in Europe shrugged his shoulders in contempt of these great countries who, in spite of their enormous armies and professed faith in the Christian religion, are too much afraid of one another to come to the assistance of their suffering Christian brethren who are being wiped out by the Turks. Montenegro gave in, but King Nicholas will not long be able to control his subjects, who are fighters and soon will demand to be turned loose on the Turkish assassins. Then nothing can avert the dreaded war in the Balkans.

England's Latest Engine of War Ready Shortly

LONDON, July 29.—In November next an important addition will be made to the British navy, when the new battleship "Orion" will be placed into commission as the flagship of the admiral in command of the home fleet. The "Orion" is the first English man-of-war carrying the new 13.5-inch gun. She has 10 of these formidable weapons, while the dreadnoughts carry only 10 guns of 12-inch size.

A sigh of relief will go up from all patriots in England when the admiral's flag is hoisted on the "Orion" for until then the arch-enemy, Germany, which had the most modern and powerful European battleship cruiser at the recent coronation review at Spithead, is able to claim the honor of having the most powerful warships at sea. Her battleship "Thuenen" outclasses any of Great Britain's dreadnoughts.

London Girl, Married to Chinaman, in Sad Plight

LONDON, July 29.—A strange tale of a London girl who married a Chinese student in England and accompanied him to Chengtu, hundreds of miles in the interior of China, is told in the European press in China.

According to the report, the girl, on arriving at Chengtu, made the dismal discovery that her husband already had a Chinese wife, to whom he had been married before coming to England.

Apparently, the British consul took up the case, and urged the girl to return to London, as she was not legally married under either English or Chinese law.

A report has reached the authorities at Peking from the acting viceroy of Szechuan, who mentions that notwithstanding the advice of the British consul, the girl refused to leave the place. The Chinese official adds that, on the request of the British consul, he himself ordered the girl to go back to England, but she held to her determination to remain in Chengtu.

The Chinese foreign office is understood to be considering the case, but it is difficult to imagine what they can do.

BERLIN, July 29.—"Der Hochzeits" an incomplete manuscript of Wagner, has just been discovered by an English collector in a Berlin curiosities shop. He has purchased it for $10,000.

Electrician Who Made Paris Dark Is Longing for Fame as an Author

PARIS, July 29.—In connection with labor union matters there is an interesting announcement concerning the notorious labor leader, "King" Patand, who distinguished himself from the point of view of the proletariat by calling on the electricians, and plunging the city in darkness. "King" Patand now seeks to obtain distinction in another sphere of activity. His recent debut as a dramatist has put the notion into his head that, of the few men who can really write well, he is one of them.

Patand does not see why he should not have some of the laurels which go to M. Paul Bourget. Apparently he believes that there is more money in writing than in acting as secretary for the electricians. So he has thrown up his job, and the electricians are now seeking a man to succeed him. Patand has started his ship on the somewhat stormy sea of literature with a very light heart. He is taking no stock of the possibility of his encountering adverse winds. He has already been offered work. He desires to capture a large public at once, and to this end he will write for a newspaper, which has a large circulation.

Family Proves Devotion to Woman Radly Burned

LONDON, July 29.—A wonderful story of family-devoting and self-sacrifice is recalled by the restoration to complete health after years of suffering through a burning accident, of Mrs. Hawkey, a farmer's wife living at Beauchamp Roothing, Essex.

The accident occurred through some petrol, with which Mrs. Hawkey was cleaning clothes, becoming ignited. She was very badly injured about the arms and back. Skin to replace that which had been burnt was grafted on to the victim from the bodies of no fewer than 20 relatives and friends, at their own request.

There were so many who underwent this martyrdom that Mrs. Hawkey has forgotten the names of some and cannot recollect the exact number, but there were at least twenty, including: Father, mother, husband, four brothers, three sisters, four uncles, a sister-in-law and several cousins and friends.

Saint Genest Chosen as Shorthand Writers' Patron

PARIS, July 29.—Spanish shorthand writers, it appears, have been anxious to have a patron saint. In describing how a suitable choice for the position was made, a French newspaper waxes facetious. As this journal (not very accurately) remarks, at the period when saintly persons suitable for the office were alive, shorthand was neither known nor necessary. And the Spanish stenographers, after considerable research, chose Saint Genest, who, it is said, suffered martyrdom for refusing to transcribe an imperial decree. Saint Genest had already filled the role of hero of a tragedy of Rostand, and now that his name again comes into posthumous fame, this time as the patron of shorthand writers, our contemporary sheds a crocodile tear of sympathy for him.

Expect to Save Crops in France From Rail Through Electricity

PARIS, July 29.—Experiments of great interest from an agricultural point of view are to be conducted on the Eiffel tower. It is a case of utilizing the tower as a means of preventing hailstorms. M. de Beauchamp has, with the aid of electric poles over 600 feet high, prevented land within a radius of two miles from being ravaged by hail. If similar results are obtained from the experiments on the Eiffel tower, Paris and Versailles, as well as the market garden zones which separate them, will be saved from hail, a population of 300.

WORKINGMEN GET INCREASED PAY CAUSE HIGHER HOUSE RENT.

LONDON, July 29.—Septre, the famous mare, belonging to Sir William Bass, was disposed of at the Newmarket bloodstock sales for $35,000. The purchasers were Messrs. Somerville and Rupert Tattersall, and the price paid was appreciably lower than was expected. Much rich history could be written of the wonderful performance of this mare. She was by Perseus, King Edward's first derby winner, of 1896.

On the death of the late Duke of Westminster, the famous Eton stud cannot be learned. One report says that threats have been made to kidnap him, though this is not generally believed, it being current opinion that the bodyguard is simply a precautionary measure against possible harm.

Early in her 4-year-old career, she was sold to Sir William Bass for $125,000, and for him won the Hardwicke stakes at Ascot, the Jockey club stakes and the Duke of York stakes. Her most memorable defeat was in the Eclipse stakes, when she was beaten by a neck by the derby winner, Ard Patrick, who had also beaten her in the derby. In all, the famous mare won $191,415.

Septre's other three daughters came under the hammer in May, along with the remainder of Sir William Bass' horses in training.

Shows Development of Malady and How He Tried to Overcome It.

LONDON, July 29.—An educated man's diary of growing madness and struggling against the impulse to kill or commit suicide was read at the Old Bailey when the mystery of the cyclist highwayman was solved.

It will be recalled that Soul Splitter, a motorcyclist, riding towards Roper late on night, was overtaken by a man on a bicycle with whom he conversed, and who suddenly shot at him several times, shouting "Your money or your life." The assailant, George Douglas Hay, aged 24, was brought to trial on Saturday, when the diary of his mad mind, who described the case as unique, read passages from Hay's life story, written by himself.

Dr. Dyer presumed that Hay was an illegitimate child, inheriting high intellectual faculties. He had no doubt now that he was of unsound mind. The diary, divided into periods of years, ran as follows:

Developes Aversion to Society. Seventeen to 19: Begin to develop aversion to society and tendency to withdraw into shell, pass through short unhealthy period of most perverted religious devotion; take special treatment for stammering, resulting in temporary cure. Return of stammer; consequent sense of something incommunicable quickens my longing for isolation, and I take situation (as postman) in tiny remote village.

Nineteen to 20: Become depressed as stammer gets worse. Continue to live in village as much a stranger as I am. Hysterical nervousness becomes excessive; meditate constantly on the fatality of life. Live now absolutely alone.

Twenty-two to 24: The suspicion begins to grow that my stammering is not the root of all my trouble, but is merely the manifestation of some deeper psychic malady. Placed myself in the hands of a specialist for treatment by Professor Freud's system of psycho-analysis, and return apparently cured. Fortified to detect after few months of first normal existence I ever enjoyed; namely, my immunity from mental ailments, etc.—signs of return of my affliction.

Wanted to Kill Someone. Discovery of certain things brings home the realization that I am a close "introspectionist" and forthwith begin to practice consciously with an intensity never known. To master myself through agonizing mental exercises, the last drastic of all of which was daily an hour or two's intensest auto-suggestion. So excruciating became the nervous tension when in the presence of other people that I was now driven to carry my revolver with me. It was necessary for me in the conflict of personality, absolutely to dominate myself. That was the only test of whether I was succeeding in killing my psychic enemies in the internal struggle. And I knew or instinctively felt that if I stayed in the presence of anyone the conflict at first conscious, would inevitably end in his killing me by my killing him.

During the terrible months I spent hours daily in the innermost self-discipline and self-suggestion, lying for hours in the privacy of my bedroom in semi-trance with every faculty suspended, save my thoughts, which wrestled till I seemed to agonize. The very quivering tissues of my limbs seemed to be laid as open and exposed that I actually experienced physical pain from sounds as a footfall.

To the prisoner's counsel Dr. Dyer said: "It is possible for a man to be conscious that he had a mental infirmity, and that it is growing on him, and to struggle against it. It is possible the details the prisoner has told me of the impulses which have been welling up in his life during the last 18 months and the terrible struggle he has had to keep it down.

The jury returned a verdict of guilty but insane, and the prisoner was ordered to be detained during his majesty's pleasure.

ROYAL DOLLS ARE LATEST.

LONDON, July 29.—There is no end to the ingenuity of toy makers nowadays, and little girls of today are enchanted over their king and queen dolls, which are the latest thing in the children's world.

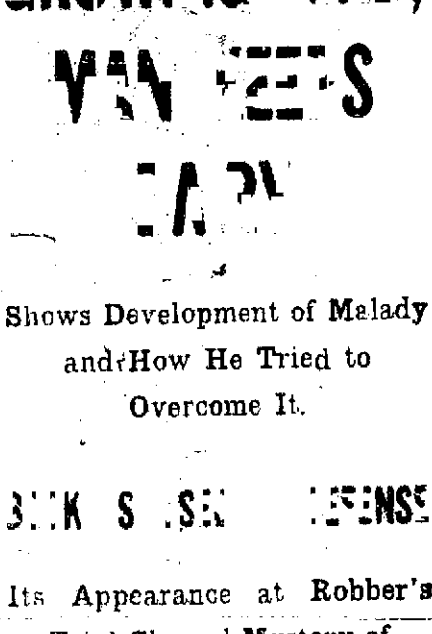

These dolls, which children are intended to keep in remembrance of the coronation, are wax figures made to resemble the queen, dressed in beautiful garments which are copies of her majesty's robes, the king crowned and wearing his regal robes.

RAIN STOPS RAILWAY WORK

KHARTUM, July 29.—Work on the Kosti to El Obeid section of the Cape to Cairo railway has now been stopped for the rainy season, rainfall being 150 miles west of the White Nile at a place called Um Ruaba.

A recent improvement in the through route south is the new timetable of the White Nile Mailboat service, giving a bi-monthly communication. Leaving Kosti on the eighth and twentieth of each month, the boats reach Relat (Tado) in the twenty-first and sixth

It was necessary for me in the conflict of personality, absolutely to dominate myself. That was the only test of whether I was succeeding in killing my psychic enemies in the internal struggle. And I knew or instinctively felt that if I stayed in the presence of anyone the conflict at first conscious, would inevitably end in his killing me by my killing him.

During the terrible months I spent hours daily in the innermost self-discipline and self-suggestion, lying for hours in the privacy of my bedroom in semi-trance with every faculty suspended, save my thoughts, which wrestled till I seemed to agonize. The very quivering tissues of my limbs seemed to be laid as open and exposed that I actually experienced physical pain from sounds as a footfall.

To the prisoner's counsel Dr. Dyer said: "It is possible for a man to be conscious that he had a mental infirmity, and that it is growing on him, and to struggle against it. It is possible the details the prisoner has told me of the impulses which have been welling up in his life during the last 18 months and the terrible struggle he has had to keep it down.

The jury returned a verdict of guilty but insane, and the prisoner was ordered to be detained during his majesty's pleasure.

ROYAL DOLLS ARE LATEST.

LONDON, July 29.—There is no end to the ingenuity of toy makers nowadays, and little girls of today are enchanted over their king and queen dolls, which are the latest thing in the children's world.

These dolls, which children are intended to keep in remembrance of the coronation, are wax figures made to resemble the queen, dressed in beautiful garments which are copies of her majesty's robes, the king crowned and wearing his regal robes.

RAIN STOPS RAILWAY WORK

KHARTUM, July 29.—Work on the Kosti to El Obeid section of the Cape to Cairo railway has now been stopped for the rainy season, rainfall being 150 miles west of the White Nile at a place called Um Ruaba.

A recent improvement in the through route south is the new timetable of the White Nile Mailboat service, giving a bi-monthly communication. Leaving Kosti on the eighth and twentieth of each month, the boats reach Relat (Tado) in the twenty-first and sixth

COLORADO'S ART POTTERY

Just by the point of interest most attractive to those of an artistic nature is the new pottery plant of the Van Briggie Pottery Company. This is where the world-famous Van Briggie Art Pottery is designed and made, and is easily reached by carriage, automobile or by street car. Van Briggie Pottery is modeled in the peculiarly adaptable clays which are found in the neighborhood of Colorado Springs, and Colorado's beautiful wild flowers form some of the chief decorations. Van Briggie Pottery is especially noted for an individuality of art glass which was discovered by Mr. Artus Van Briggie in 1898 and was immediately recognized by the master heads in ceramics. Tourists and visitors to the Pikes Peak region are invited to visit the Van Briggie Pottery, where they may learn how the crude, rough clay taken from the ground is moulded and colored into the uniquely artistic forms which characterize this product of the Centennial state. The display rooms at the Van Briggie Pottery are open from 8 a. m. to 5 p. m. Have your driver stop at the Van Briggie Pottery.

Summit Pikes Peak

View from Cog Road and Summit Station

Pikes Peak is the landmark of the Rockies, and one of their chief attractions. It stands at an elevation of 14,347 feet above sea level, and over 8,000 feet above Colorado Springs. Ascent is made by the famous Cog Road, an example of engineering skill. At a cost of nearly a million dollars, this road, with an average grade of 34 1/2 feet to the mile, has been built to its summit. Comfortably seated in an observation car, you are pushed slowly up this steep pole of steel, until you have reached one of the highest eminences on the globe. Above the earth, above the clouds, only the sky overhead, all the world beneath. Around you an unobstructed view limited by the bounds of vision. On the west is the vast Colorado, on the east the plains, on the south appear sharp points of the Spanish Peaks. To the north is Long's Peak, Gray's Peak and the Continental Divide. It is an inspiration, a sight that none forget. The train leaves Manitou at 10:30 A. M. and 2:30 P. M. and reaches the summit at 1:00 P. M. and 4:00 P. M.
